The legislature will conclude the session at midnight on March 25, two days before Easter.

Speaker Roy V. Wednesday morning. Approved by Committee.

The Hastings bill was approved last week by the house temperance committee and the fight for its adoption will be led by the author. Representative W. G. Hastings, of Fulton county, and by Chairman George Sabados, of the temperance committee. The measure provides a strictly local option system whereby only those counties voting for liquor could sell it openly. The bill also provides that mixed drinks may be sold in hotels, dining cars and clubs. Representative Hastings has declared his bill will yield about $3,000,000 a year in new state revenue.

While indorsed by the house temperance committee last week, the bill is not the only one likely to reach the flow.

GLOBE-FLIGHT STORY

Of all the world flights that have been made, only one has touched the Southern as well as the Northern Hemisphere, and it dipped but briefly below the equator. This was the two-stage globe-girdling voyage of the late stage globe-girdling voyage of the late Australian airman, Sir Charles Kingsford-Smith, who rounded out his brilliant achievement of flying across the Pacific from California to his homeland in 1928 by taking the same planethe rest of the way around the world and back to his starting point in 1930. To the end of his career, however, Sir Charles maintained that crossing the Charles maintained that crossing the Southern Cross, en route to England, set his world flight apart from all others and made him the only man who had ever "really flown around the world."

Honolulu First Stop.

To a large degree, Miss Earhart will follow the trans-Pacific trail blazed by Kingsford-Smith and his three companions, Charles T. P. Ulm. Harry Lyons and James Warner, during the injtial stages of her flight. A 2,410-mile jump from Oakland to Honolulu is her first objective, as it was his. The next leg of Kingsford-Smith's flight took him to Suva, in the Fiji islands: thence he flew to Brisbane. Australia, and on to Sydney, a total distance of 7,200 miles from his California starting place. Miss Earhart will bear slightly westward of his route from Honolulu, making her first landing 1,900 miles from Hawaii at Howland Island, a tiny speck of land in the Pacific recently developed by the Department of Commerce as an intermediate airport on a possible future commercial flying route to Australia.

Her next jump is the longest of her ture commercial flying route to Australia.

Her next jump is the longest of her entire journey, a 2.550-mile flight to Lae, in the gold fields of New Guinea. From there to Port Darwin, on the northern tip of Australia, is a relatively easy hop of 1.200 miles, and there after she will follow westward as far as Karachi, India. Thence her course lies across the mouth of the Persian Gulf and along the Arabian coastline of Aden, British outpost guarding the entrance to the Red Sea.

Course Across Africa.

From Aden, Miss Earhart plans to fly by stages straight across the heart of Africa to Dakar, Senegal, her jumping-off place for the 1.800-mile South Atlantic crossing to Natal, Brazil.

From Natal she plans to fly up the coast to Fortaleza, Para. Paramaribo, Quiriquire, and so on to Maracaibo, in Venezuela hopping from there to Panama and thence through Central America, via Managua and Guatemala City to Vera Cruz and Mexico City. Her next jump will be to Matzatlan, and after that to Calexico, whence she will fly nonstop back to her world flight starting point, Oakland, Cal.

Radio To Be Employed.

In addition to the highly skilled services of Captain Manning as a navigator, Miss Earhart will have the most modern radio aids to navigation during her solo flight; on its Pacific.

This is the one phase of her 27,000-mile dolyssey which she feels she could not possibly hope to match the seven-day, eighteen-hour, forty-nine and one-half minute globe-circling record of the late Wiley Post, if for no other reason than that the 15,596-mile route flown by him was little more than half the course that lies ahead of her. Georgia has made rapid strides forward in the textile industry in recent years. Whether this progress will be continued, to the greater prosperity of Georgia, depends on the intelligent cooperation of Georgia's cotton-farmers, mill-management, mill-operatives and merchants.

What the cotton-mills would like to see is the Farmer get a fair price for his cotton, the mill-operative a fair wage for his labor, and the stockholders a fair return on their investment . . . They feel sure that this is likewise the wish of the majority of farmers and operatives.

The textile industry has blossomed and thrived in other sections before, only to be blighted by discord, and a lack of cooperation and understanding between the producers of raw material, the legislators, the millmanagement and the mill-operatives ... This should not, and must not happen in Georgia.

representatives opposed to repeal, with indications pointing toward one of the major debates of the session when the bill is called up.

From all sections of the state representatives have received home-county petitions urging them to vote against repeal.

The consolidated forces for probibi-

The consolidated forces for prohibi-tion—representing the united efforts of the W. C. T. U. and other agen-cies of similar attitude on the liquor question—have taken a stand for re-question—have taken a stand for repeal of present wine and beer laws, as well as for strict enforcement of the "bone-dry" law.

The statute outlawing hard liquor has been on Georgia's books since 1915. Preceding it was the first statewide prohibition law, which ended the day of the saloons but permitted liquor in clubs or "locker clubs."

First Anti-Liquor Law.

Prior to passage of the "club" law in 1907, the first major liquor measure came in 1901 under sponsorship of the W. C. T. U. when a law was enacted requiring the teaching in pub-

After that year, the liquor question was dormant in Georgia for a number of years, especially after the national prohibition law went into effect.

The movement leading to repeal of the federal constitutional amendment as a revenue measure.

Governor Neutral.

Governor Rivers, whose administration has displayed great power in the general assembly on most questions, told the legislature he would approve any liquor law passed, but he did not express any preference on either side of the question.

His only request on liquor was that the assembly take whatever action it was going to as early as possible so that in event such a law passed—or did not pass—other revenue measures could be considered accordingly.

Although major measures in two administration programs—social security and school improvement—have been enacted into law, numerous other acts requested by Governor Rivers have progressed only partially through the legislature.

Administration Successes.

Administration measures which have passed during the first five weeks of the session include:

The seven-month school bill, under which the state will aid all counties in keeping common and high schools open at least seven months.

The board of education reorganiza-tion measure, setting up a new admin-istrative system in conformity with the new school program.

Seven social security acts to provide old-age pensions, aid to dependent children, assistance to the needy blind, a new public welfare department to administer the program, a June election to vote on two constitutional amendments connected with the program, and the amendment bills empowering the state and counties to levy social security taxes.

the last few years have underscored the importance of programs to conissation along the ines of a model soil conservation law suggested by the Agriculture Department.

This "standard state soil conservation district law" allows a group of 25 or more "land occupiers" to torm stroys itself.

"In the act of congress approved April 27, 1935 (public No. 46 of the 74th congress), the federal government, through the soil conservation service of the Department of Agriculture, initiated a broad program for the control of soil erosion. Demonstration work has been undertaken but much remains to be done. The conduct of isolated demonstration projects cannot control erosion adequately. Such work can only point quately. Such work can only point the way. CAUSES WASHING. BLOWING OF SOIL

BLOWING OF SOIL

"The problem is further complicated by the fact that the failure to control erosion on some lands, particularly if such eroding lands are situated strategically at the heads of valleys or watersheds, can cause a washing and blowing of soil onto other lands, and make the control of erosion anywhere in the valley or watershed all the more difficult.

"We are confronted with the fact that, for the problem to be adequately dealt with, the erodible land in every watershed must be brought under some form of control.

"To supplement the federal programs, and safeguard their results, state legislation is needed. At the request of representatives from a number of states, and in co-operation with them, the Department of Agriculture has prepared a standard form of suitable state legislation for this purpose, generally referred to as the standard state soil conserva-tion districts law.

TO DIRECT PATROL Jobs Will Be To Prevent

Arms, Volunteers From Entering Spain. LONDON, Feb. 27.—(P)—Interna-tional diplomats called for two key men tonight to direct a cordon of for-eign warships and military observers around warring Spain.

Their jobs would be to hold the civil war inside the country and keep both men and munitions from crossing the frontiers from the outside. One would supervise the sea patrol, the other the land guards along the French and Portuguese boundaries.

The danger of the conflict spreading into other parts of Europe was dissipated, it was believed, by a 27-power agreement in the international non-intervention committee to ban foreign volunteers in Spain—effective a week ago—and begin a supervised control plan by next Saturday midnight.

The naval control plan calls for German and Italian ships to be sta-tioned off government-held territory. British and French vessels will watch Insurgent ports.

ANGRY EX-KING FORCING ROYAL FAMILY TO GIVE GEMS BACK TO WALLY

Financial Settlement on Edward Is Reported To Be Imminent.

CANNES, France, Feb. 27.—(UP)
The British royal family, to avoid "unpleasantness" threatened by former King Edward, may return to Mrs.
Wallis Warfield Simpson the jewels of Queen Victoria and Queen Alexandria which the American woman surrendered several weeks ago, it was reliably reported tonight.

Mrs. Simpson gave up the almost priceless jewels, given to her by Edward during their courtship, at the insistence of the royal family.

Family Angers Edward.

Edward, angered by his family's pressure on "the woman I love," was said to have insisted upon immediate restoration of the jewelry, which he contends was a personal gift from his grandmother and great-grandmother. The jewelry, he said, was not to be confused with the English crown jewels.

Edward and the Duke of Kent—he will send a message to parliament asking that the royal family's civil list be reviewed by a select committee.

The Roswell Masonic hall was damaged early yesterday morning when he visits his second home.

His first planned stop is in Augusta. It was here, in 1735, two years after the founding of Georgia's first capital, Savannah, that Scotch traders established a trading post at the head of navigation on the Savannah river. A year later, English soldiers followed, building Fort Augusta was preventing its spread to adjoining structures. Cause of the fire was under the usual amenities of the time.

The President might well pause in his journey to enter the home of Governor George Walton, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. The New Deal executive's visit will be briefer than that of Washington, who caused quite a flurry among Georgia women by attending a ball an later remarking on the beauty of the women and their manner of dress. President Roosevelt will find equally as beautiful women in this fair city of Georgia. It will be his first personal appearance in that section of a state he has for so many years made his second home. This visit probably has been influenced in no small part by the present editor of the oldest newspaper in the state, the Augusta Chronicle, Thomas Hamilton.

Augusta first became the capital of Augusta first became the capital of Georgia during the Revolutionary War. In 1778, Savannah, where the legislature of the state of Georgia met under the constitution of 1777, was captured by British troops. It had been selected as the state capital because the royal governors had always lived there and because it was the largest city in the state. From 1778 to 1784 the legislature met in Augusta, with the exception of two terms when the city was temporarily Augusta. With the exception of two terms when the city was temporarily in the hands of the British. On these occasions the state capital was moved, for one year to Fort Heard, in Wilkes county near Washington, and for one year to Ebenezer, in Effingham county. Whether it can be claimed that these bless research. ty. Whether it can be claimed that these places were actually the state capitals of that year is a moot quesand it took them away from their homes for too long a time.

So, in 1786, the legislators named commissioners charged with selecting a site for a state capital near the then center of population. This resulted in the purchase of land in what is now Louisville. Lack of funds and other difficulties resulted in languages. in long delay, so it was not until 1796 that the legislature met in the first state house built in Georgia. Louisville was the first Georgia capital actually designated as a perma-nent capital, although both Savannah and Augusta actually served as state

United States senate, resigned that post to enter the legislature and wipe out the "blot on the escutcheon" of the state's history. The fraud resulted from a bill passed by a narrow margin by the legislature providing for sale of what are now the states of Alabama and Mississippi, then owned by the state of Georgia, for one and a half cents an acre to a group of land speculators. There seems little doubt that members of the legislature voting for the bill were, in the most part, heavily bribed, although some attempt has been made to view the action as a legal real.

Old Slave Market.

The President intends to stop in Louisville, and will probably speak from the old slave market in the center of the city. This slave mart is more than 140 years old but, being built of post oak, is today as staunch as it was when built. The actual date of the building of the market is not known, but it is believed to have been constructed at about the time the statchouse was constructed. We will not see the old statchouse. It has been completely destroyed, and not a vestige remains today, although the courthouse now standing has been erected over the foundations of the statchouse. statehouse.

Milledgeville, the fourth capital of the state, saw a great part of the history of development in the state.

Here Roosevelt will tread in the path of the immortal French patriot, Lafayette, who was wined and dined there shortly after the city was built.

Mayhap the ghost of Governor Teams will look upon the President.

Mayhap the ghost of Governor Troup will look upon the President. It was Troup who sounded in the statehouse the first distinct and unequivocal call for the protection of states rights, and who single-handed brought the United states government to terms before the War Between the States.

The furore surrounding the President's proposal for the revamping of the supreme court had a counterpart in this great central Georgia city, for in the legislative halls of that day Stephens stood on the rostrum and opposed withdrawal of the state from the Union, and it was here that Rich in history, and rich in personalities is that section of Georgia, and no man can take that trail but hark to the days long gone and the men who made Georgia.

It has long been the popular conception that Georgia's early population was entirely comprised of debtors and convicts from England. That was true to some extent, but the men who made Georgia were not, generally speaking, these men. We find in the grucible of Georgia history men of the Scotch lowlands and highlands; men of Dutch nationality, blood brothers to the ancestors of the man who next month will follow in their footsteps—the man who will retrace the path of history across the state. There has been considerable dispute over the actual course of his travels, but it seems fairly well established that he visited Cutifachique, identified as having been located on Silver Bluff. approximately 25 miles south of Augusta.

It was also at Augusta that the first patents on a steamboat were issued. In 1788 the legislature in session there issued the first and only letters patent granted by the state of Georgia. They were issued to Isaac Briggs and William Longstreet, giving them exclusive rights for a period of 14 years "to a steam engine, constituted by them for purposes of navigation." The letters patent were issued while the Articles of Confederation were still operative. A short time later patents became the special prerogative of the United States government.

It was the English who followed them to construct forts to hold lands already settled.

It was Georgia that first in this country found the duel effective in the with his ship on the Savannah river.

It was Georgia that first in this country found the duel effective in the adjustment of differences between gentlemen. It was also the last to abandon the custom. One of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, Button Gwinnett, died of bullet wounds received in a duel near Savannah.

been host to many since the day of Washington's visit. In 1819, President Monroe paid a visit to the city. In 1898, President McKinley also visited the city. In 1913, Taft was there as President, having visited the city before his election.

It was also the boyhood home of Roosevelt's former superior (while he was assistant secretary of the navy during the World War). President Wilson lived there for many years.

So Georgia will see more than an ordinary visit of President Roosevelt. The man who has made history in the past four years will be following the paths of a history we have long since torn away from. But, on the relics of this history, this glorious past, Georgia and the nation have built the foundation for the new history of a President as great as the first to visit Georgia, George Washington.

Errol Flynn, Anita Louise Co-Star In 'Green Light' on Screen at Fox

A best seller for two years, Lloyd C. Douglas' novel, "Green Light," has been translated to the screen, retaining all of its original strength and beauty and brought to life by a more than competent cast, in the Cosmopolitan production "Green Light," which opened Friday at the Fox theater as a First National release.

Errol Flynn, whose first two pictures, "Captain Blood" and "Charge of the Light Brigade," proclaimed him one of the greatest screen "finds" of recent years, adds stature to his dramatic reputation with his handling of the role of Newell Paige, the young surgeon, who sacrifices his own professional integrity to cover the mistake of an older doctor. In shouldering the blame he incurs the hatred of Phyllis Dexter (played by the lovely Anita Louise) whose mother's death was caused by the fatal mistake.

To justify his life, and to prove to Phyllis, whom he loves, that he is trying to make up for the tragic mistake she believes he has made, he goes to an obscure laboratory in the Rocky mountains and risks his life trying to discover a vaccine that will prevent the dread spotted fever.

threat of civil war—was reported in reliable quarters today.

It was reported that the Chinese Communists—a constant menace to centralized authority in China for more than a decade—had accepted conditions stipulated by the central executive committee of the Kuomintang (people's party) for full co-operation and peace.

Absorb Red Army.

These included absorption of the Chinese Red army, with its stronghold in Shensi and Kansu provinces, into the Nationalist forces, and acceptance of the leadership of Nanking the unification of China's factions.

Chinese "Red" propagandists in Shensi and Kansu were busy over the week end tearing down anti-Nanking posters and signs reading "Down with Chiang Kai-shek" (generalissimo at Nanking), advices from the interior reported.

New posters with the slogan: "Help Chiang Kai-shek Resist Japan," were plastered on walls and in public buildings.

A mighty roar echoed back from the faded blue Sierra Madre mountains as the charging brigade rounded the track in a mile and one-quarter dash for the richest turf prize in the world.

Jockey Harry Richards brought Rosemont from behind as they neared the far turn, and with Seabiscuit, Special Agent, Indian Broom and a gallant Don Roberta battling gamely, literally lunged down the track to win.

'TOO CLOSE FOR ME,'

SANTA ANITA. Cal., Feb. 27.—(P)—Jockey Harry Richards, dismounting after a victorious ride aboard Rosemont in today's rich Santa Anita handicap, sighed and said:
"Whew! That was too close for comfort." He referred to Rosemont's photo-finish win over Seabiscult, which brought the Foycatcher farm $91,800 first-prize money and more than $9,000 bonus to himself.

LEONARD LEAVES FOR CAMP TODAY

By Ralph McGill.

Atlanta's spring baseball season gets off to a start this morning when Emil Leonard tucks a couple of baseballs and a glove or so into his bag and himself behind the wheel of his automobile and heads for Panama City, down in Florida.

Emil Leonard is the early bird of the year, feeling very chipper indeed with his appendix in a bottle instead of in Emil Leonard.

All of which means that the 1937 baseball season is almost upon us. The remainder of the squad, 39 men and Manager Eddie Moore, will report officially on March 14. Leonard goes earlier because of his recent opera-

It was the third day this month the "handle" at the Santa Anita track was more than one million dollars.

On February 20 and on Washington's birthday and on yesterday, the crowds each day shoved more than $1,000,000 through the pari-mutuel windows.

And a lot of ladies and gentlemen were, I am sure, still trying to get to the windows when they closed, waving fresh money and shouting, "Wait, here's mine."

The winning hoss yesterday brought at least $100,000 to his master. That will buy the hoss quite a lot of hay and the owner quite a lot of fodder. Down at Hialeah park they are hanging up purses of $20,000 and $50,000. And the old Kentucky Derby is back at the $50,000 mark once more. And there will be 90,000 people in Louisville, gawk-ing at the marks of the flood, drinking mint juleps in the streets on Derby eve and jamming at least $1,000,000 into the mutuels on the Derby. It's pretty sure to go that high this spring.

The safest bet is to play the choice of the Little Woman, provided it is her first trip to the races. She will select a horse because it looks pretty or has a pretty name. And that horse, if it is her first time at the races, is pretty sure to win. It comes under the heading of instinct. Or something.

The safest way to play the races is not to play them at all.

The next best bet is to emulate eight young ladies who were observed in a shrill huddle at the Kentucky Derby last year. Each had up a quarter and they were trying to decide on which hoss to bet the two dollars. No one gets hurt with those wagers.

will be played at 8 o'clock Monday night.

Commercial beat Griffin High, 19 to 17, and North Fulton upset Fulton High, 17 to 16, in two of the greatest games of the tournament thus far. Neither team was ever more than three points in the lead during the semi-finals.

The defending champions played without the services of Charlie Monsour, injured in Friday night's game and Lawhon, who recently was ruled ineligible by the Commercial faculty.

A changed defense and accurate field goal shooting tells the story of Commercial's victory. Returning to the old zone style of defense. Commercial easily broke up Griffin's fast-breaking offense and forced the Spalding county lads to fire away from long range.

Commercial used a man-to-man defense in the early stages of the game but progressed slowly and soon took the lead after switching to the zone style.

If Entire Team Can Duplicate Walter Lawson's Recent Feat, All Will Be Well.

If the Atlanta bowlers, rolling under the name of "Georgia Crackers," expect to win the National Duckpin Bowling Congress tournament cham-pionships that will be staged on the Norfolk (Va.) alleys this March and April, they must develop "hot mitts" and roll better than their averages. The Atlanta bowlers, representing the five top average men of the city, include Walter E. Lawson with an average af 121; A. J. Sossong, 120; George W. McKay, 119; Carl Tidwell, 118, and L. B. Outler, 117,

First Complete Poll Shows Voters 53% Against Court Change

But Opinion May Shift, Institute Warns, Preparing To Measure Future Trend

By GEORGE GALLUP

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—With all sections of the country heard from, the first complete tabulation of ballots in the American Institute of Public Opinion's supreme court poll shows 53 per cent of voters opposed to President Roosevelt's plan to alter the membership of the high judiciary.

The figure is by no means final. Public opinion, never static, may change as the court discussion continues. If this is the case the Institute, which is conducting a continuous poll on the court issue, will report the trend of sentiment from week

During the last session of congress various measures that were enacted into laws caused the President's popularity to rise and fall, as reported in numerous polls taken by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

His proposal to change the makeup of the supreme court has caused more discussion than any law passed by the last congress. Has it caused his popularity to increase or diminish? The answer will be given in "America Speaks" next Sunday in The Constitution.

Wagner, Borah Named In Institute's National Poll of Legal Profession

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—Professor Felix Frankfurter, of Harvard University; John W. Davis, one-time Democratic candidate for President; Newton D. Baker, war-time secretary of war, and Senator Robert Wagner, of New York, are the four leading choices for justices of the United States supreme court in a nation-wide poll of lawyers just completed by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

The lawyers' survey, a special feature of the Institute's national poll of voters on the supreme court issue, covered a crosssection of 175,000 members of the legal profession. They were asked: "Is there anyone you would like to see named to the supreme court?" Next to Frankfurter, Davis, Baker and Senator Wagner, three other men received prominent mention-Senator Borah, of Idaho; Dean Roscoe Pound, of Harvard Law school, and Judge Learned Hand, of New York, Besides giving their choices for the high bench, in case appointments are to be made under the President's plan, the lawyers were asked whether they approve of President Roosevelt's proposal to enlarge the court, what three members of the present court they regard as the most able, and whether supreme court justices should retire at 70. The vote on these questions is summarized as follows: Most able members of the present court—Chief Justice Hughes, who is 74 years old; Justice Brandeis, 80 years old, and Justice Cardozo, 66.

2. A majority of lawyers oppose the retirement of supreme court justices at 70. 3. As reported in The Constitution last week, lawyers polled by the Institute are 8 to 2 against the President's plan to alter the court by appointing one new

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.-(P)-Buyers hitch-hiked with the special-ties in today's stock market.

While selected issues pushed up fractions to a point or so, the list as a while milled about within a restrict-

Most attention was centered on the merchandising group, but a few motor trucks, steels and electrical equipments received their share of support.

News of an especially stimulating nature appeared to be lacking and many traders were inclined to stand aside and await further developments in labor and legislative fields.

The generally anotherical attitude exin labor and legislative fields.

The generally apathetic attitude exhibited toward the market was reflected in the total two-hour turnover of 1,003,570 shares, which compared with 1,484,730 last Saturday. It was the smallest volume since January 2.

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—(P)—Quiet trading today failed to alter appreciably the price standing of most sections of the bond market. The levels at which domestic cor porate loans traded all week were held or dipped slightly further. Rails, in particular, found the going rough and many settled to new low ground for the year. Industrial and utility issues closed about abreast their lows regis-tered earlier in the week.

Daily Bond Averages.

In the carrier section New York, Ontario & Western liens lost ground sharply, the General 4s closing 2 3-4 lower at 26 and the refunding 4s off 2 3-8 at 32 1-2. Today's breaks followed heavy reversals Thursday and Friday after the road announced it. Friday after the road announced it would defer a March 1 interest payment. St. Paul 5s of 2.000 lost 1-2 at 11 1-2 and Southern Pacific 4 1-2s dropped 5-8 to 94 1-4. Counter moves were made by Minneapolis & St. Paul 5 per cent certificates which gained 2 1-4 to 20 1-2 and Iowa Central 4s up 1 1-2 to 8 1-4.

Although only minor changes were registered in the utility and industrial quarters, certificates for American Writing Paper 6s lifted 2 to 94 1-4 and Hudson Coal 5s fell 3 3-8 to 46 1-8 to impart color to the latter the government list. Setbacks ranged from 1.32 to 5.32 of a point.

Little of interest occurred in the foreign sector.

ATLANTA SPOT COTTON. Atlanta spot cotton closed steady. middling, f.o.b., 13.75.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 27 .- (AP)-An active demand from spot houses for the March position tended to lift the whole cotton market today and at the end of trading options were 4 to 9 points higher.

Large merchants continued to take all March cotton offered, a demand that raised the position at one time to 12.90 cents a pound. The spot month lost a couple of points before the close, however, finishing at 11.87. New crop months were not in as active demand and their gains were confined to smaller proportions. Oc-tober finished 6 points higher at 11.94, while December and January both ended at 11.99.

A broadening demand in spot cot-A broadening demand in spot cotton circles helped futures today. Reports from large spot centers said that the supply of desirable grades outside of those held by the government in its loan holdings were practically exhausted. White grades of good cotton were said to be practically extinct.

BY GAINESVILLE JUDGE

LUMPKIN, Ga., Feb. 27.—(P)—
Sixty years ago, rainwater dripping from the eaves of a newly built barn started a little gully across a farm near here. Nobody thought much of it.

Land was rich and plentiful; such gullies always had formed when houses and barns were built on high spots, and farmers paid little attendance. The barn that started the gully was the first thing to go, for once the erosion reached the sandy subsoil it spread uphill as well as downhill in little attendance. houses and barns were built on high spots, and farmers paid little attention to such things as soil convervation, terracing and the like.

Today that gully has become a canyon—a grotesque, ugly scar on the earth's surface. Into the canyon have gone barns, school houses, cemeteries, forests, churches—all in all, 10,000 acres of improved and unimproved lands.

VALDOSTA, Ga., Feb. 27.—(P)—
Department of Justice officials today said a man listed as Clarence O'Neal, 22. of a textile subrub of Valdosta, is being held under a federal warrant in the Moultrie jail pending investigation of extortion letters.

Officials said O'Neal was bound over to a federal grand jury under $1,000 bond by United States Commissioner W. E. Perry at Valdosta.

O'Neal's arrest, officials said, followed receipt of a letter by a Strickland Cotton Mills executive at Valdosta demanding $1,000, and a letter by a Valdosta merchant demanding $150.

Commission has set up one kind of examination and that everyone who enters the classified service must pass that particular examination whether the position sought is that of physician, stenographer, boiler maker, accountant or hydraulic engineer. There is no such thing as the civil service examination—here is a different examination—here is a different examination of different kinds of employment all based upon the work to be performed and all as practical as it is possible to make them. Examinations have been held for nearly 2,000 different occupations. More than 200,000 people are examined the proposed and urge continued extension of the

Peachtree Road Property Owners Support Paved Sidewalk Project

Peachtree road property owners continue to sign petition for paved sidewalks at cost of material only. The Fulton county commissioners through a fine spirit of co-operation with the roadside beautification committee of the Peachtree Garden Club, granted a petition for free labor and equipment for paving sidewalks and placing curbing along Peachtree road from Palisades road to Piedmont road. Signatures on the petition were notarized by a certified notary public. Additional property owners requesting paved sidewalks are W. J. Davis, 300 feet of walk and curbing south of Peachtree creek, and Mrs. Marion Furse, 2100 Peachtree road, N. W., 50 feet of sidewalk and curbing. Concrete sidewalks will be constructed in rotation as soon as there is no further danger of freezing weather.

Peachtree Hills Woman's Club, with Mrs. R. E. March in the Vegetable Garden

By W. ELBRIDGE FREEBORN.

March is probably the busiest of all the months in the vegetable garden, and all of our early spring vegetables must be planted just as soon as the ground is in shape to work. Irish potatoes, onion sets, beets, carrots, all kinds of greens, such as spinach, rape, mustard, kale and Swiss chard; radishes, lettuce, asparagus roots, rhubard roots, Bermuda onion plants, cabbage plants, English Peas.

Now is the time to plant the tall growing, heavy bearing varieties of English peas, such as Thomas Laxon and Telephone, which is a fairly large. March is probably the busiest of all | there is on vegetable that is planted

Beets and Carrots.

Companion plants to radishes are beets and carrots. They also require a rich, loamy soil and should be grown though Bloomsdale is widely planted.

BOOKS and Their AUTHORS

AS I LIVE AND BREATHE, by Willie Snow Ethridge, Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York, $2.50. 357 pp. Depicts Joys of Life.

"As I Live and Breathe," scheduled for release March 4, bids fair to establish for the author a reputation for presenting a book written in a charmingly interesting style, forceful, yet simple in language.

Mrs. Etherides is no powice writer.

simple in language.

Mrs. Ethridge is no novice writer.
Her journalistic work is well known in the south, and although this is her first book, her articles have appeared in leading magazines.

The intimate style in which she writes is further developed in her use of the first person. There is no plot in the book. There is no startling climax. There is no high tension of events or characters. There is only the lively account of life—real life—that results from the happenings of an interesting family during 12 months in Georgia. The writer's newspaperman husband and their three children testify her great love for home dren testify her great love for home and family. Her husband is "The Roommate" and the children are "The Offspring," sometimes referred to as the "Unholies."

Being the wife of a newspaperman, the author has very appropriately titled her first chapter in that manner. It is hardly possible that readers, outside the Fourth Estate, may recognize the underlining of humor, truth and understanding whereof she writes. She often refers to her hustruth and understanding whereof she writes. She often refers to her husband—as her "Eight-Column Streamer" and writes quite boldly that "if we are invited to a party and he doesn't want to go he simply announces that Monday (or whatever the day may be) is his hard night." But she continues: "If he is invited to a poker party, or a bathing revue, or a chicken supper which he craves. or a chicken supper which he craves to attend, he does not have to make up excuses, about lodges or sick friends. He simply says: 'I'll be

Romance of a River. ANNA BECKER. By Max White. Stackpole Sons, New York. 273 pp. $2.50. THE NILE. By Emil Ludwig. The Viking Press, New York, 619 pp. $5.00.

Perhaps to better understand this novel one should take into consideration the birthdate of the author, which was 1906; and the place, New York state. Which means that war in Europe was the subject he heard discussed from 8 to about 14, for when the war itself ended the repercussion had only begun. The returning soldiers marched with hunting flying in the breeze, and bands playing: Emil Ludwig has produced one of his finest books in "The Nile," the great story of a still greater river. His word pictures, graphic in descriptions of the territory through which the river travels on its 4,000-mile journey to the sea, and the people who depend to a great extent on its sustaining waters, have lost none of their delicate shadings through transtheir delicate shadings through translation. Ludwig begins his chronicle of the river not with the pyramids at the mouth, but with the water falls at Lake Victoria. The Pharaohs are thus Lake Victoria. The Pharaohs are thus observed as a single episode near the close of the Nile's career, an episode in which Cleopatra, Anthony, Napoleon, and Lord Kitchener are closely related factors.

The reader is carried along from the Mountains of the Moon to the Mediterranean sea as the author presents fabulously rich incidents of the river's life; human giants and pygmies; bird paradises; vast swamps; Abyssinia.

cussion had only begun. The returning soldiers marched with hunting flying in the breeze, and bands playing; then the reaction, and everything dating from "before the war." The impossibility of going back to the even, smug basis of life made his impressionable 'teens arrive in a chaotic time of mental unrest and rebellion. This he absorbed to such an extent that he "was asked to go away and not bother anyone any more" at the various colleges and universities he attended, which ranged from Vermont to France. Perhaps that is why he has dedicated this volume to his mother, who must have had a rather difficult time during those formative years. The book itself is a protest, or rebellion against punishment for things one cannot prevent, and the smugness of old New England. It shows how the changed social standing of a woman changes the woman herself, the inner woman. It is a very human story, and well written, but I cannot recommend it to the young or unsophisticate: probably for that very reason. There seems to be no sin but the sin of intolerance.

"Anna Becker," in the language of the people and time against which the author was protesting, was a "frail woman." She really was one, for she could not swim against the tide, but floated, as a leaf, which now and then, in an eddy, will seem madly to turn and fight to escape, then lapse into, if not complaisance, at least into non-resistance. So, did Anna. paradises; vast swamps; bird paradises; vast swamps; Abyssinia, with its curious customs and still stranger history, slave running; the dervishes who killed Chinese Gordon at Khartoum; Aswan Dam, where the at Khartoum; Aswan Dam, where the annual rainfall is naught; the madhouse of the cotton market in Alexandria; and the Suez canal, dreamed of by Assyrian kings for centuries. Centuries upon centuries passed into history, each freighted with events of greatest import to the inhabitants of the lower reaches of the Nile and those who clustered in the cities near the point where its waters mingled the point where its waters mingled with that of the sea. Little did they care from whence came the stream that made fertile the valley which supplied them with food for themselves and stored their granaries against time of famile.

NEW YORK, Feb. 27 .- About the time that "High Tor" became a hit comedy on Broadway, worth some $16.600 or $17.000 a week to its author. Maxwell Anderson, its producer, Guthrie McClintic, and to its actors, among them Burgess Meredith, people started talking. There is an actor's and author's and artist's colony up where the play is supposed to take place, and that always makes for talk.

It did not take long to discover that "High Tor" was not only a play about a man who owns a mountain, but was also a mountain owned by a man. Friendly Discussion of Industry Problems Satisfactorily Concluded.

By RALPH T. JONES.

Japan.
On that date a mutual understanding between the textile industry of Japan and the textile industry of America was consummated which, it is believed, will inevitably result in greater prosperity for both countries

The American Textile Mission, representing various industrial associations in the United States, on that date concluded a series of conferences with a delegation composed of the leading Japanese manufacturers of textile piece goods. It was concluded by the approval of both groups to a written memorandum of understanding, for the limitation of Japanese exports of cotton piece goods to the United States during 1937 and 1838, upon the quota principle.

America, increased prosperity for American industry, greater profit and happier trade relations in textile lines for the Japanese manufacturers and exporters and a more satisfactory trade condition for both countries.

In ible Benefits. Among the intangible benefits which, quite possibly, may outweigh the immediate gains, is the fact that for the first time in history international negotiations between industry, rather than between statesmen and diplomats, has accomplished in completely friendly manner solution of a problem that at one time threatened, seriously, to disturb the friendly and peaceful relations between two great nations.

Acceptance of NRA standards of pay and of hours of work came from the textile industry first of all the big industrial groups in the United States. Despite the fact that these NRA scales reduced the average hours of work in the industry from 55 hours a week to 40 hours, despite the fact that they are increases involved an average jump of approximately 80 per cent, the industry as a whole gladly joined in the national administration's plan for higher incomes and consequently higher standards of living for the great mass of workers of the nation.

When the supreme court declared the NRA unconstitutional, the textile industry continued, to all intents and purposes, the higher rates of the pay and the shorter hours of work, voluntarily. The industry argred with the content of the rate of increase was cause.

Background of Problem.
To understand that story properly, it is necessary that the situation as it existed before the mission was conceived, the problem that brought it into being, be first set forth.

Know then, that the croumstances that created the problem date back to the conception of the NRA and the acceptance of NRA principles and standards by the textile industry of America.

Older people, it was said, fail to accord youth places of leadership: the language of the church is outworn and often meaningless to youth; and the church is talking but not living or working toward the kingdom of God which it preaches. The church as an end in itself, not a means toward a noble end, has little interest for a generation eager to be doing something. No better argument could be made for always observing the rules of every game you play. Of course, in the instances mentioned above, the breaking of the rules was probably not intentional, but it was none the less costly. And in some cases, players do commit fouls purposely, because they think they can "get away with it." Some-times they do—for a while. But there always comes a day when they pay dearly for breaking the rules.

The best reason for playing according to the rules is, of course, the fact that it is the right and sporting thing to do. But it's also helpful to know that it's the wise thing to do, strictly from a selfish

THE LOCKER ROOM MYSTERY BOYCE MORGAN

SYNOPSIS.

Harry Tolling, a student at Franklin High school, lives in a shabby house in a poor neighborhood. His older brother, Jack, gets mixed up in a robbery and is sent to prison, but Harry hopes to clear him by locating Pete Pare, who was really responsible for the robbery. Then the lockers of the Franklin basketball team are robbed, and Harry is suspected. On the night of the big game against Scott. Harry is forced out of the game by a nosebleed after he gives Franklin a six-point lead. He discovers that the Scott team's lockers have been robbed, and while investigating, blood from his nose falls on the floor. This leads to his being suspected once more of being the locker room thief. Ted Lane, captain of the Franklin team, tells Harry he has faith in him, and asks Harry to accompany him on a sleuthing expedition to find the real thief. But Harry says he is going to spend the evening looking for Pete Pare. Ted insists on going along, and together they visit the neighborhood where Harry lives. > Miss Higgenbothem Weds Mr. Myers.

WEST POINT, Ga., Feb. 27.—Of cordial interest was the wedding of Miss Mary Higginbothem and Giles McAden Myers, of Atlanta, which took place at the home of the bride's methevery hearer could find that which was genuine, entertaining and beautiful.

"The Gondoliers" is an inimitable masterpiece of its kind. It unravels to a dramatic and highly entertaining conclusion. In the opening of the operetta, two jovial gondoliers select their wives from a crowd of pretty girls by a plan of chance, and laughter way off. Then the Duke, Duchess, and their daughter appear. The duke reveals his purpose for coming to Venice, namely, that his daughter as a child was betrothed to the Prince of Barataria and, because the king is the maid's sorrow, for she secretly shares a love with her father's aide. The grand inquisitor, responsible for the young prince's kidnaping, had, put him in the hands of a noble family, where he became confused with the family's son, and now only the fostermother can identify him. While some one is sent to find her, two gondoliers rule in pompous state. Suddenly, one day, the grand inquisitor appears to announce the queen of Barataria. He also expresses his feeling that one of the gondoliers, the queen, and the wives gasp. Who is married then?

The gondoliers, the queen, and the wives start to discuss the curious situation. The foster-mother appears at the critical time to disclose the true king as the duke's aide. The duke's aide. The duke's durchter and the aide are united as the king and queen of Barataria, much to the relief of the two puzzled gondoliers and their pretty little wives.

Black-Malone.

Black—Malone.

DUBLIN, Ga., Feb. 26.—Miss Sara Evelyn Black became the bride last Sunday of Lucian Augustus Malone, formerly of Monticello, at a ceremony in the home of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. E. L. Black. Dr. C. D. Graves, pastor of First Baptist church, performed the ceremony in the presence of relatives and friends.

Miss Elma Black was her sister's maid of honor and the bride's father gave her in marriage. The groom's brother, Robert Malone, of Monticello, was best man. The bride wore a suit of navy blue wool, the fingertip-length coat being trimmed with silver fox. Her blouse was a shoulder corsage of valley lilies, and an heirloom brooch that belonged to her maternal grandmother, the late Mrs. G. T. Wheeless.

Mr. and Mrs. Malone left for a wedding trip to Jacksonville and other Florida cities. Mr. Malone is the son of Mrs. A. L. M. M. Lone, of Monticello, and holds a responsible position with the Lovett-Tharpe Hardware Company here.

Priceless Antiques and Paintings Adorn Newlyweds' Apartment

By Sally Forth.

SARAH and Bob Candler's apartment on Peachtree road is a dream of a home and contains hansome pieces of antique furniture placed in attractive arrangement. The walls in the living and dining room are cream-colored and the rooms are connected with a graceful arch. The dubonnet velvet carpet on the living room floor ties in with the dubonnet window draperies, which are flowered in lavender, yellow and blue iris, and hang at the side of white voile curtains. Above the davenport, upholstered in blue and silver-striped satin, hang a pair of gilt-framed water colors, one featuring red poppies and the other lav-ender iris. The pictures were exhibited at Grand Central Art Gallery and came into Sarah's possession through a membership card belonging to her father, E. E. McCray, of Kendalville, Ind.

Mahogany tables at each end of the sofa are topped with yellow china lamps decorated in Chinese figures and finished with yellow taffeta shades bordered in white. An eighteenth century mahogany desk is graced with a white porcelaine lamp adorned with dubonnet flowers to match the taffeta shade. One comfortable chair is upholstered in yellow, another in silver damask, and the blue leather chair in the corner of the room is Bob's pride and Joy. A floor lamp, with a white shade, provides the light for the maste of the house when he studies, as Bob is a member of the senior class at Emory University Medi-cal College. A mahogany bookcase with beaded glass doors, holds priceless china and crystal, as well as valuable books. Watercolor pictures of red birds flank each side of the bookcase, and add a colorful note against the cream walls.

The mahogany table in the dining room is of the Hepplewhite period, and cream leather covers the bottom of the chairs. The inlaid antique mahogany side-board came from New Orleans, and is beautified with a silver service and other handsome pieces of silver. Red predominates in the Persian rug covering the floor, and the gilt-framed pictures on the wall are done in clusters of red cherries and gooseberries, with green leaves

A magnificent mahogany bed with posts carved in bunches of grapes, is in Bob's and Sarah's boudoir. The walls are pale blue and the floor is covered with a deeper blue velvet carpet. Two brown mahogany chests and a chaise lounge upholstered in brown quilted satin correspond with the brown leaves on the white background of the draperies at the window, and white voile curtains the windows. At one side of the bed is the brown wicker basket in which sleeps "Sandy," the Scotch terrier, and the wall bookcase shelves are filled with attractive pieces of bric-a-brac.

Between the twin beds on the pale pink wall in the guest room hangs a sampler embroidered in a verse which offers welcome and relaxation to the west. The painted furniture is apple green and yellow, with bouquets of pink roses painted on the yellow panels in the dressing table, chest of drawers and twin beds. The rose velvet carpet ties in with the color of the roses, and exquisite patchwork spreads cover the twin beds. A pair o Dresden china lamps in the shape of Pierrette and Pierrot have white taf-feta shades edged with white ruffle and rose-colored ruffles, and a bow of rose taffeta is tacked on the shade.

Cream satin covers the chairs with yellow framework, crystal lamps topped with white shades, and a rose-colored waste basket complete the charming arrange-ment. Not to be forgotten are the priceless prints of girls standing by flower stalls hanging on either side of the chest of drawers, entitled "Will You Buy My and "Will You Buy My

Bob covered the linen closet shelves with pale pink quilted satin bound in apple green satin, and hereon rest the gorgeous collection of sheets, tablecloths, serviettes, pillow cases and what net. Legion Auxiliary National President Will Visit Georgia on March 8

By MRS. C. B. McCULLAR, of Milledgeville, State Editor.

Mrs. Lorena Hahn, of Nebraska, national president of the Legion Auxiliary, will be Georgia's guest March S. She will be honored with a luncheon in Atlanta, which members of the state executive board and Legion Auxiliary officials will attend. Mrs. J. W. Oglesby Jr., of Quitman, department president, has been in Atlanta making preparations for the coming of the national executive. Mrs. Al Henson, of Atlanta, department radio chairman, will be in charge of plans for the radio address of Mrs. Hahn.

Mrs. W. S. Davison, of Baldwin, second vice president and membership chairman for Georgia, urges units to renew the campaigns for membership in order to have an "over-the-top" report for Mrs. Hahn when she comes to visit Georgia. She reminds unit membership chairmen of the Oglesby award of $25 to the unit having the largest increase in membership. Mrs. E. R. Harris, secretary, and the awards which she is offering to the district vice presidents for their district records. It is important for all unit treasurers to get in dues for as many members as possible in order that the reports may be completed before the executive board meeting March S, which will be held in conjunction with Mrs. Hahn's visit.

ture Union is going forward and enlarging its temperance program at a steadily increasing rate. In a message to her constituency the state president, Mrs. Mary Russell told of the hearing on the liquor bills before the house and senate temperance committee. She said that the gallery was packed with W. C. T. U. members, their timely applause as well as our speakers "Showed that we were actively on our job, and have no idea of quitting. By the time this reaches you, some decision will probably have been made, whatever the result, we go straight ahead! Referring to the 60,000 signatures to petitions asking legislators to repeal beer and wine that came from 110 counties and placed on the desks of legislators, she said: "Not one county with an active W. C. T. U. failed to send signed petitions."

Georgia W. C. T. U. owns two sets of Julius Gilbert White's slides, which he has already shown to 48,000 pupils and teachers in the state, one is for grammar and one for high schools. They are in Atianta for the present, as Mr. Bell, the visual education director, has a projector and will show them to every school in the city. The slides will be loaned in any county that has a projector—the cost of transportation and replacement of any injury to the slides will be the only charge.

The W. C. T. U. owns the moving, sound picture, "The Beneficent Reprobate." J. H. Wardlaw, of the university system, has it now in his charge for distributions. It will be available to state colleges to Y. M. C. A. and church groups. This has been made possible by the first part of the temperance education fund, some of the million-dollar fund which has been paid by Georgians.

Mrs. Russell has co-operated with the state board of education in the preparation of the program for Temperance Day in public schools on March 26, as required by law. This program will go to every school in the state from this state board of education.

PARTNER-HANDLING.

experts, wrangling flercely over their strong and weak points, one maintaining that X's brilliance on opening leads more than compensates for his slight deficiency in dummy play, and vice versa, the last word is always on the subject of partner-handling.

This is no more than natural. The purely technical side of contract, while vast, is not infinite, and at least a score of master players now know almost all there is to know about this side. The psychological possibilities, however, are inexhaustible, and in this realm "partner-handling" stands out as the most about this side. The psychological possibilities, however, are inexhaustible, and in this realm "partner-handling" stands out as partner and promptly proceed to dig a hole and crawl into it, refusing to come out for any call short of an opening two bid because you know the major's tendency to hop, skip and jump, you are (subconsciously perhaps) attempting the difficult job of partner-handling. True, yours is only a general solution, neither deft nor shrewd, to apply to all overbidding for his invariable optimism—tie only a general solution, neither deft nor shrewd, to apply to all overbidding partners. I cite the case only to prove that almost all players are aware of the need for partner-handling. Pattently, it is childish to crowd a thousand varieties of players are aware of the need for partner-handling. Pattently, it is childish to crowd a thousand varieties of players are sinto only three narrow categories—overbidders, and to apply one of only three sets of tactics, according to the occasion. "Partner-handling" is not nearly so simple as that!

Let us construct an imaginary-actual situation, and attack this subject via case method.

Your nevert nartner is a fairly

Your present partner is a fairly gecurate bidder, a shade on the conservative side, but, as a deciarer in a "tight spot," has a tendency to become flurried and, hence, is not too dependable in the play of the cards. Your opponents are aggressive bidders, close doublers, and highly efficient on defense. With both sides vulnerable, you rae dealt this hand:

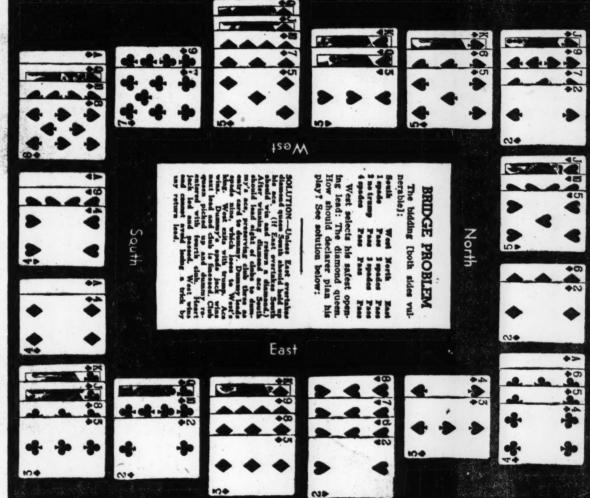

vulnerable, you rae dealt this numerical vulnerable, you rae dealt this numerical vulnerable, you rae deals and bids one of diamond, second hand passes and if you respond: One spade. Next opponent overcalls with one no trump and now partner rebids: Two hearts. Second hand passes, and it is up to wen to find the proper call.

Theoretically, you should raise the hearts to three. You have a far from brobust hand, but your one spade response did not guarantee strength, and despite that fact, and the furwhere fact that fourth hand put in a strong bid (considering his vulnerability), your partner has shown far better than a minimum by "reversing"—namely, bidding hearts after having started with the lower ranking diamond suit. If your partner were an expert dummy player besides being a sound bidder, failure to raise him at this point would be cowardly. But, with your singleton in his opening suit bid, and the fact that the no-trump overcall is apt to be honest so far as spade stoppers are concerned it requires no great vision on your part to foresee that a four-heart contract will probably require play that is beyond partner's capabilities. Add the mennee of those well-known close penalty doubles from your opponents, multiuly by the concomitant that partner plays even more nervously when doubled, and the answer is clear: don't raise!

Wait for, not a better, but a safer nand more easily manageable hand. If partner actually makes four hearts on his contract for only two look as contrite as possible, and mumble that you were a "sissy."

d you consciously "held back" in fear to fix play under pressure! Don't, d if you ever expect to win a rubber with him, let him know that you have been "handling" him!

A bad choice of opening bids is usually difficult and often impossible to set aright on future rounds of bidding. North in the hand shown below, never did manage to mention the only suit in which game could be made after getting off on the wrong foot.

bid at this stage. Partner would read him either for six hearts and five spades, or for shorter major suits, but a much stronger hand, considering his "reversal." Rather than present such a picture, which might easily push the contract to dizzy heights, Nor hid his spade suit entirely and meekly rebid his hearts. He prayed for a four-heart bid from South, but did not really expect it and, when the dreaded three notrump followed, found himself right back in his quandary. Mentally tossing a coin, whether to pass or bid four hearts, the "pass" won and south was elected declarer in a hopeless contract.

West opened his fourth highest club, dummy won and ied a spade. Declarer knew that the odds were against an adverse 3.3 heart split and, therefore, figured his best chance was to establish the spade suit. The spade ace was followed by a accond round and when West showed out, discarding the six of diamonds, declarer had forebodings of disaster. East won with the jack and returned his remaining club, West took the ace and knocked out declarers last stopper. Declarer attempted to minimize his loss by running the heart suit, but West had it stopped and ended up by winning one heart trick, two more clubs, and the diamond ace, for a two-trick defeat.

The bidding error that North made on this hand was one of the most common types to which inexpert players are susceptible. The high-card superiority of his heart suit bilinded him to the strategy of a spade bid. Unless the disparity between the two major suits is enorthween the suits and the s five years with the radio chains, I knew that I had a lot to learn about acting for the soreen. I appreciated it when another actor, or a director or somebody else dropped a useful hint. HEN I first came to Hollywood after

Ameche studies Hollywood's technique-the tender chap, the romantic young man and the tough guy who finds a good left advantageous. earn Hout Love on Ameche

I was not, however, completely prepared for what was before me. It was several weeks before a Sympathetic Soul buttonholed me and started hemming and hawing and finally said:

"Don, you look fine in your tests, but there's one thing that you ought to work on. You ought to learn how to make love."

That sort of bowled me over. Up to that moment I had had the idea that all I was expected to do was learn to act on the screen, and besides — I said:

"I'm no celluloid Casanova, and it's too late for me to learn. I'm a respectable married man with two children."

"I know, I know," said the Sympathetic Soul. "What I mean is, you've got to be romantic. You know, the sort of thing that makes the girls stand in a line a block long in front of the boxoffice."

WELL, I confess that I didn't know. I thanked the Sympathetic Soul for his suggestion and forgot the thing until I saw Tyrone Power working with Loretta Young in "Love Is News."

I am also in that picture, but not in the capacity of lover.

"If I'd taken the Sympathetic Soul's advice," I said to myself. "I might be doing that scene with Miss Young."

So I decided to look into the lovemaking traditions of motion pictures. I studied the technique of all the latest lovers and did some research on the old-timers. Eventually I came to the conclusion that Rudolph Valentino was the greatest of them all.

Mr. Valentino was the impetuous type. He kept his film ladies in a state of flustered retreat until about the fifth reel, when they tired. Then along about this time Rudy would slow up and make the ladies chase him. This was a very good technique, but I'm afraid it's not for me.

Then I saw Robert Taylor in one of his current pictures. Mr. Taylor differed from Mr. Valentino only in minor details. Valentino, once the moment had come to clinch, would crush the lady until her breath had failed her. It, this weakened condition Rudy would smother her under an epic kiss that lasted fully two minutes.

Mr. Taylor, when he kisses a screen lady, wears a smile which seems to say:
"You know, my dear, that you're not the only girl I've ever kissed."

One of Twentieth Century-Fox's promising actors, Don Ameche's next appearance will be in "Love Is News," with Loretta Young. Which sounds romantic.

special technique is to kid his film sweet-heart into submission. A superior lover, he seems a little ashamed of being sen-timental in public.

Also in the group of gentlemen who practice finesse is, or was, John Barrymore. Mr. Barrymore's method, I discovered, was to treat his lady with mixed elements of scorn and disdain until the closing reels of the picture demanded something warmer for the cash customers. Then he would spring into action, garner the lady commandingly into his arms and bite her neck.

The neck-biting technique, which was quite the vogue at one time, is no longer used.

Leaving the field of finesse for a moment, we come to the understanding type, headed by Herbert Marshall and Warner Baxter. These gentlemen are by no means impetuous, but they get their girls just the same. Mr. Baxter, who figures he has made love to some 400 film ladies, plays a plodding game. Like a chess player, he makes each move a deliberate advance. The pattern of his love-making demands that there be several defeats, but he takes these so chivalrously that in the end the lady loves him for his own sweet self.

Mr. Marshall is somewhat the same type. Like Mr. Baxter, he doesn't rush Fate. Both these gentlemen are the good husband type. A girl may chase after the Valentinos and Taylors for months, but in the end they marry the Marshalls and the Baxters.

THE sock-'em type is led by Clark Gable. Mr. Gable is a two-fisted, Twentieth Century lover who plies his cinematic romance with robust humor. When he loves them they stay that way for eight or nine reels. But on occasion the lady uses cyness and

Mr. Gable, in bringing her back to her senses, is likely to slap her where it will do good, which seems to take all the dignity out of her, and the coyness as well. However, he does all this with a roguish, boyish smile, and the lady who doesn't love that kind of treatment never lived.

However, I'm afraid I haven't the proper nonchalance to carry it off well. James Cagney is something of the same type, or has been in the past, except that he doesn't smile when he socks the lady of his heart.

The boyish type a girl is sure she can trust in a lonely mountain cabin is still another interesting type. Gary Cooper belongs to this idealistic group. Gary's love making, in most cases, fits the strictest requirements of the Board of Censors. The Cooper heroes believe that womanhood should be respected; any cinema heroine can safely trust herself to them.

Also in this category is Michael Whalen. Mr. Whalen is the type who could invite a girl for a walk through a dark tunnel without getting a blush for an answer. Neither Mr. Whalen's nor the girl's hair would be ruffled when they emerged. This would not be true of the Barrymores, the Gables and the Taylors.

THE SIEEK-haired lovers are typified by George Raft and Cesar Romero. Both of these gentlemen were dancers and they make love with graceful movements. Mr. Raft, however, is sinister in his approaches, while Mr. Romero is as clear as day-

Ronald Colman is one of the subtlest lovers the screen has ever known. He is the distinguished type that every woman wants for decorative purposes. This is no slander against Mr. Colman. As a lover he has no superior. His technique is a compound of restrained grace, intellectuality and, when he gets down to business, masculine possessiveness. He is, what the average man likes to think he is, but isn't.

Leslie Howard is the screen's sole remaining esthetic lover. With his head in the clouds, his mind in a welter of poetry and his lips forming cultivated sentences, he does light well as a romancer. He is the eternal Romeo climbing balconies in the moonlight.

This, it seems to me, pretty well covers the great lovers that I know of. And I can't make up my mind what type I'd like to be. There's something in the Barrymore system and it I could mix a little of that with some Gable technique and Colman finesse, there's no telling to what heights Ameche might rise.

But my research has failed to disclose just how these gentlemen got that way, and I'm afraid the screen heroines will have to take me or leave me—as believed it, wouldn't have believed it, would you? Before "Theodora Goes Wild," anybody who suggested that there might be a touch of wildness about that perfect lady, -rene Dunne, would have been laughed down in meeting.

Believe It or Not, Miss Dunne Actually Acts on Impulse a Good Deal of the Time

By Lyle Rooks

Oh, there were revelatory moments in "Show Boat," but they could have come about through the mean insistence of a director who failed to appreciate the inviolable dignity of perfect ladyhood. I'll bet many of her fans watched that shuffling black-face number with the honest conviction that it broke Irene Dunne's a little well placed rowdiness now and then. She had the time of her life being Theodora. More of the same kind of truth is that she has felt rather like Theodora through a good part of her career in pictures because, in a sense, she has been forced to lead a double life. Patrician features, very genteel manners and a natural reserve—until provoked—confounded Hollywood. These qualities combine with straight dramatic ability sometimes. That makes sense. But who would expect to find a bit of zany underneath? It is there, all right.

Those who know her best, and she has a small circle of close friends, maintain she acts on impulse a large part of the time. Often the impulse is dictated by a profound sense of the comical. She's a wow at performing crazy pantomimes on the spur of the moment at parties. Not large parties, though. She freezes at those, when she goes at all.

Then there's the matter of her house. It is the first house she ever owned and she built it herself amid soul-trying arguments with architects who knew better and such a turmoil of mind-changing it was a miracle that the last nail was ever hammered. It took so long the garden had a chance to grow up around it and the bordering hedge reached the adult height of six feet before the house was occupied. The nedge is one of trene's problems. It is continually alling in one spot and she insists it has an allergy. That's what comes of being married to a doctor.

The house is a dream set down on a winding street in Holmby Hills just across the way from the house that Claudette Cobert's jack built. I remember negotiating the oval drive to Miss Dunne's front door full of admiration for the exterior and anticipating exquisite taste in the furnishings.

Was opened, I was faced with a great expanse of polished floors and empty rooms. One article of furniture stood in the entrance hall, an antique cabinet of a sort to make a collector's mouth water. I was shown into the library and it contained exactly three chairs and a small table, obviously a temporary resident. Nothing else; not even a rug. There were drapes at the windows but they were tied fore, aft and in the middle with loops of white twine.

My hostess was awfully pleased with me for knowing why the twine. I think she made it a sort of test. Either you knew it was an ingenuous way of keeping the folds in proper pleats until they had hung long enough to get used to it, or you were hardly worth bothering with.

"We're sort of camping out, as you can see," she explained, turning on the full charm of her smile. I nodded, convinced, of course, she had moved in only the day before. She showed me the view from her music room window and I was noting the room contained nothing out a piano of lordly dimensions when certain subterranean mutterings were heard and the place seemed to shake itself gently. Earthquake?

"Now that," said Irene, "would be the air conditioning system. I'm thinking of putting plush seats down in the basement so I can take people there to sit and admire it. After all, it is the most expensive thing about the house. And just listen to the ungrateful thing grumble."

It wasn't until afterward that I found out she had been living in the house off and on for nearly six months. She just hadn't got around to furnishing it, what with this and that, pictures to make, a trip to Europe and several trips to New York. She's always dashing to New York at a moment's notice. Her husband, Dr. Francis Griffin, has his practice there and can't be in Hollywood much of the time. Irene manages a successful long-distance marriage.

Does it bother her to entertain the press or the President, perchance, in a nearly empty house? It does not. Most actreases would call in an interior decorator and have the whole thing done up over the week-end. Not Irene. She knows what she wants, or she thinks she does. The trouble is she's always changing her mind. Anyway, everything in her home is going to be of her own the choosing today, why then tomorrow will do.

Wide and Handsome:" It is making a picture at Paramount called "High, Wide and Handsome:" It is the story of the discovery of oil in Fennsylvania and the struggle to build the first pipeline to the Atlantic Coast. Perhaps it will turn into an epic somewhat along the lines of "Cimarron," which was her first hit. The story is good. She has Randy Scott for leading man, Mamoulian for director and music by Jerome Kern. Irene likes to sing in her pictures and she hasn't been allowed to much. She was a musical comedy star before she came to Hollywood. Yet until recently neither comedy nor music were included in her pictures.

I was on the set when they were taking the first scene. She was decked out in short skirt and spangles as the daughter of a medicine show operator of 1850. "Hello," I whispered. "Is the house furnished yet?" (Two more months had gone by.)

"Oh, my, no!" she laughed. "But you should see the nursery. That was pretty cute of me, wasn't it?"

It was, too. Just before Christmas Irene Dunne brought home from New York a baby girl not quite a year old. She didn't want any publicity about it until the adoption was legal and final and the baby established in her nursery, which she assures me is complete to the last safety pin. Except for one flurry she got away with it. And, characteristically, she controlled the flurry.

A rumor got out Irene Dunne was adopting a baby from the famous Cradle near Chicago. Miss Dunne made indignant denials, demanded and got retractions. The basis for her decial was that She wasn't getting the baby from the Cradle. Her husband was making arrangements through a New York baby specialist. But she didn't mention that. SHE is MARVELOUS how she intimidates people who miss the naughty twinkle in her eye. Reporters have been known to try all the tricks for an hour in an effort to get her to talk about something important and then leave tearing their hair. She has been faultlessly charming and had given precisely nothing. She doesn't like to discuss her private life at all. For example, she said a bout the baby:

"She is beginning to walk and talk a little. She is a darling and she makes me very happy, but there's no story in that.

There was a picture of me and there was a big picture of a baby. Just any baby. It certainly wasn't mine."

Then she changed the subject.

"Do you know what's holding us up? It's that mule. Raymond Walburn, who is playing my pappy, not the mule, makes a long speech from the steps of the carnival wagon there. He does a gorgeous job of extolling the unlimited virtues of his rock oil. It is for every ailment known to man and he's giving it away 'absolutely free, ladies and gentlemen—absolutely free, ladies and gentlemen—absolutely free, ladies and gentlemen—absolutely free, ladies and gentlemen the wall-eyed Walburn with mush-mouth fidelity.

"What we are peddling for a cure-all is supposed to be crude oil which seeps up through I sing a Jingle about the stuff. Then we try it on a mule to show how frisky it makes him.

"It is a trained mule and what he really drinks is a bottle of sods. His trainer says he dotes on it. Only right now he's not in a drinking mood."

the whim of a mule, she talked a little of the next picture stated for her, the story of Madame Curie. It may be a crucial test of a popularity which has taken a huge upward spurt in the last year, and she knows it.

"I want to make her human," she said, "not just the woman wedded to science, a cold, remote genius. Her own daughter told me how she used to stir test tube meases with one hand and chocolate for her bables with the other. Once when she was young she literally danced the shoes off her feet. Hearing those things makes it possible to love as well as admire her. And that is the way I want to portray her."

The fact that she hopes to make even so serious an impersonation as that of the discoverer of radium human and lovable is significant. Now that she has been released from the screen bondage of too much drama and not enough connedy, too much perfection and not enough connedy, too much perfection and not enough connedy, too much perfection and not enough colles, she intends never to the rear platform of the carnival wagon prop. Eefore she went into her tune about the wonders of "Doc Watterson's rock oil" she made herself up a jigging dance to go with it. Eyes, spangles and a considerable length of black silk stockinged legs all flashed in unison. Where did I ever get the idea there was something glacial about her beauty?

And thank heaven for disillusionment. A perfect lady without any chinks in the armor is so tiresome.

Some Numbers Lead to an Interesting Conclusion

By Grace Grandville

talking about statistics, not curves. We American women use 2,000 tons of rouge per year. We pat a mere 4,000 tons of powder on our noses from one January until the next. It is estimated that we treat our collective skins to 26,000 tons of skin lotion and nearly twice that amount of cold cream every year. Supplying us with beauty equipment is a billion-dollar business, and cosmetic sales actually exceed bread sales. All this because the ruling passion of our lives is to make ourselves attractive.

You don't think so? Well, I grant you there are things more important. Love and work and maybe worry. But in the midst of them we still think about our faces. We prepare to meet every event, whether a major emotional crisis or just a trip to the dentist, with a lipstick and a powder puff. What's wrong with that? The hand that rocks the cradle is none the less noble for a little ingernall polish.

However, it is gratifying to note that we also make away with 9,000 tons of teilet soaps and 6,000 tons of bath salts in an average year. No matter how well the lily is gilded, plain ordinary cleanlines will always be the basis of feminine beauty. Of all the attractions a woman may be born with or labor to sequire, personal daintiness is the most vital to her. And it must be absolute.

No GIRL is really beautiful unless she is fresh and fragrant from crown to toe, skin, hair, teeth and clothes. Definitely the clothes she wears must be included in the picture. Fonder that these cold days when you wear dark silk and woolen dresses. See that they are cleaned frequently—but frequently! Use a decolorant as regularly as you brush your teeth.

Rinse out stockings after every wearing. Lingerie must be immaculate. That's just as important in cold weather as it is in the summer time. Girdles need to be laundered much oftener than many women imagine. For that reason it is necessary to include at least two in your wardrobe for everyday wear. Don't fool yourself that you look as well in your clothes without a girdle. Nobody does, whatever her age or weight.

Ginger Rogers, whose agure is young and silm and the envy of millions.

girls I know is Joan Bennett. She gives the impression of having finished, that minute, bathing and dressing in crisp, fresh clothes no matter where or when you happen to meet her. It is a grand impression to give and it may be helpful to discover how she does it. Of course, her clothes are marvelous. She is giving best dressed sister Connie a run for her money these days. We can't hope to have such clothes perhaps. But what's to prevent equalling the clear, smooth texture of her skin? That fresh look isn't confined to the skin of her face, either. When Joan wears an evening dress her arms and back show the same velvety smoothness as her face. There's a reason for that, as I shall presently reveal.

Another secret of her appearance is that her blond hair is invariably both shiny and fluffy. Hair has to be perfectly clean to combine those two qualities.

Joan's beauty treatment for your entire complexion is worth serious consideration. You begin with a sturdy rubdown with salt. Taking large handfuls of ordinary salt in both hands you rubyour whole body into a glow. The salt clears away tiny particles of dead skin which clog the pores and it stimulates the living epidermis. the living epidermis. Very invigorating, too!

Then you rinse off under a shower and get into a tub of warm water. Clutching a cake of soap in one hand and a medium stiff long-handled bathbrush in the other, you apply item No. 1 to item No. 2 and scrub yourself good and properly, paying particular attention to back, elbows and knees. Kindly observe that the scrubbing is done with a brush, not a sponge or soft wash cloth. You do not dry yourself direct from a soapy bath. That's dreadful. You rinse thoroughly under the shower, cooling the water down toward the last as much as you can take it. Really cold showers are only for the strong-hearted. Now, having dried your skin thoroughly, you oil it from tip to toe. Massage the oil in well and use no more than the skin will soak up. The idea is not to leave yourself greasy.

This is the way Joan oils her back and this is also one of the reasons it looks swell. She has a special long-handled brush for the purpose and she wraps the brush in a wad of cotton, soaks the cotton with oil and massages her whole back without having to do a single contortion.

around her eyes. She has done that for years in order to guard against the fine wrinkles to which that area is so susceptible.

She washes her face with lukewarm water, never hot, and a particularly bland soap. Like a lot of motion picture actresses to whom good complexions are priceless, Joan has made an exhaustive study of soaps. She has consulted dermatologists about the various brands and she experimented with a number of them before she permitted herself to be satisfied.

There is no question but that soaps differ in their reactions according to the individual skin. What brings beauty to one-girl may practically poison another. Thin, sensitive skins require very mild soap. Thick skins, and those who have them are lucky, respond better to the stronger complexion soaps.

Joan's skin is thin and she uses the same soap which was recommended for the delicate skins of her children. Joan believes that you can't start too early insuring the future beauty of a little girl. Both Diana, who is getting to be quite a girl, and baby Melinda, who is ravishing at 3, are accustomed to having a little cream put on their faces and a little oil patted all over them after their daily baths.

That, in fact, is Budd's contribution to the team. He makes an occasional suggestion on a gag, but his main value is his facility in brightening the dialog the Colonel assigns to him. He has a way of stepping into any part. So in reality, despite the fact that Stoopnagle machinates their comedy spots, he depends largely on Budd's adaptability for successfully presenting the show. It's a team which not only produces its own script, but interprets the lines as no one else could.

The Colonel often writes much more than he really needs for a thirty-minute broadcast, but he carefully selects the livelier bits and files the rest for another week. The Stoopnagle library, which is the most valuable single possession on Observatory Hill, is filled with inventions, definitions, interviews with Little Known Men of Industry and biographies of the Colonel's famous brigade of Never Men.

A chicken is when a guy gets caught stealing them in a henhouse he says there ain't nobody in here but us. Spring is a thing that when it's snowing out and cold as the dickens, it won't be long until but usually is. Rain is stuff they call ball games on account of. The moon is what some mountain has been trying to get over Kate Smith all this time. Water is what vapor is going to be and ice was and, if it melts will be. These have become so popular the Colonel is considering publishing a collection of them along with his most uscless inventions. But definitions and inventions are only a part of that humor which the Colonel and Budd introduced to the airways seven years ago. Their ability to mix the rediculous with something boroked this entertaining contrast. The original interviews with Little Known Men of Industry and with the Colonel's brigade of Never Men have become regular features. It may be true that the rediculous phase of their showmanship far outweighs the serious. However, devokes of Stoppnagle and Budd frequently nave expressed the opinion that their style of humor is not only unique, but also the most original in

Here you have Stoopnagle and Budd, two gentlemen who help make Sunday afternoon a little brighter.

A young man by the name of F. Chase Taylor joined the production staff of Station WKBW following a series of reverses in the brokerage business.

Budd Hulk, who was born in New Jersey, came to the same station from behind a soda counter in Buffalo. His attracted so much comment that he woke up one day as an assistant production man and utility announcer.

You know how the two were shoved in front of a microphone one day to full in for a fifteen-minute program that had been withdrawn on short notice. You also know that their insane adlibbing won them first a regular spot on the local station, then a contract with the Columbia Broadcasting System. But the odd way in which they've been on the affect of their present program broadcast each Sunday afternoon at 5:30 EST over the NBC-Blue network features the usual barrage of non-sensical inventions and ridiculous definitions.

highlighted a weekly interview with a Little Known Man of Industry. These moguls in the field of small business represent an extremely unimportant cross-section of free private enterprises. Some of the more famous are the Stoopnagle and Budd We Make You Look Like Your Passport Photo Company, in which a well known character, Theodocious Wunk, is starred. comedian who prepares his own material. By Sunday the Colonel has his script in ship-shape order and the funsters are ready for their only rehearsal. For four hours on Sunday afternoon before they parade before the airways, Stoopnagle and Budd clown before the imaginary audience and go over and over the comedy spots. Strange as it may seem, they are just as funny in rehearsals as when broadcasting.

Candid shots of the Stoopnagle and Budd broadcasts might find the portly Colonel staiking up and down the rostrum of the studio twirling his glasses gingerly in one hand, and whirtling "Margie." Another pose might find him with both hands in his pockets, teetering back and forth on his toes with a rather satisfied expression on his face. Budd could be caught smoothing back his fast disappearing locks. When he moves around, his hands are behind his back and there is little or no expression on his countenance.

A ND when they actually step before the microphone to read their lines, they do even that differently than you might expect. Not Stoopnagle and Budd, from left to right—but Budd and Stoopnagle. They just can't be funny stending the other way around.

You rinse thoroughly under the shower, cooling the water down toward the last as much as you can take it. Really cold showers are only for the strong-hearted. Now, having dried your skin thoroughly, you oil it from tip to toe. Massage the oil in well and use no more than the skin will soak up. The idea is not to leave yourself greasy.

This is the way Joan oils her back and this is also one of the reasons it looks swell. She has a special long-handled brush for the purpose and she wraps the brush in a wad of cotton, soaks the cotton with oil and massages her whole back without having to do a single contortion.

STOOPNAGLE AND BUDD are particularly proud of these useless inventions! An upside-down lighthouse for submarines; red, white and blue starch for washing the American flag; cloud paint to make possible sky billboards for aviators; cellophane mattresses for old maids so they don't have to get out of bed when they look under it, and wet envelopes for people who loathe licking stamps.

His comedy is therefore still ad-lib, but it's ad-libbed onto paper instead of directly into the microphone. The work on the show comes after the first draft has been written. It is then that Stop and Budd must get together to decide what interpretation they will give the

That, in fact, is Budd's contribution to the team. He makes an occasional suggestion on a gag, but his main value is his facility in brightening the dialog the Colonel assigns to him. He has a way of stepping into any part. So in reality, despite the fact that Stoopnagle machinates their comedy spots, he depends largely on Budd's adaptability for successfully presenting the show. It's a team which not only produces its own script, but interprets the lines as no one else could.

The Colonel often writes much more than he really needs for a thirty-minute broadcast, but he carefully selects the livelier bits and files the rest for another week. The Stoopnagle library, which is the most valuable single possession on Observatory Hill, is filled with inventions, definitions, interviews with Little Known Men of Industry and biographies of the Colonel's famous brigade of Never Men.

which the Colorer calls definitions: A straw is something that you drink a soda through two of them. A chicken is when a guy gets caught stealing them in a henhouse he says there ain't nobody in here but us. Spring is a thing that when it's snowing out and cold as the dickers, it won't be long until but usually is. Rain is stuff they call ball games on account of. The moon is what some mountain has been trying to get over Kate Smith all this time. Water is what vapor is going to be and ice was and if it melts will be. These have become so popular the Colonel is considering publishing a collection of them along with his most useless inventions. But definitions and inventions are only a part of that humor which the Colonel and Budd introduced to the airways seven years ago. Their ability to mix the ridiculous with something bordering on the scrious has for long provoked this entertaining contrast. The original interviews with Little Known Men of Industry and with the Colonel's brigade of Never Men have become regular features. It may be true that the ridiculous phase of their showmanship far outweighs the serious. However, devokes of Stoopnagle and Budd frequently nave expressed the opinion that their style of humor is not only unique, but also the most original in

Here you have Stoopnagle and Budd, two gentlemen who help make Sunday afternoon a little brighter.

A young man by the name of F. Chase Taylor joined the production staff of Station WKBW following a series of reverses in the brokerage business.

Budd Hulke, who was born in New Jersey, came to the same station from behind a soda counter in Buffalo. His attracted so much comment that he woke up one day as an assistant production man and utility announcer.

You know how the two were shoved in front of a microphone one day to full in for a fifteen-minute program that had been withdrawn on short notice. You also know that their insane adlibbing won them first a regular spot on the local station, then a contract with the Columbia Broadcasting System. But the odd way in which they work out their mad stuff now that they've been on the air for seven years has been pretty much of a mystery.

The set-up of their present program broadcast each Sunday afternoon at 5:30 EST over the NBC-Blue network of a inventions and ridiculous definitions.

For four hours on Sunday afternoon before they parade before the airways, Stoopnagle and Budd clown before the imaginary audience and go over and over the comedy spots. Strange as it may seem, they are just as funny in rehearsals as when broadcasting.

Candid shots of the Stoopnagle and Budd broadcasts might find the portly Colonel staiking up and down the rostrum of the studio twirling his glasses gingerly in one hand, and whistling "Margie." Another pose might find him with both hands in his pockets, teetering back and forth on his toes with a rather satisfied expression on his face, Budd could be caught smoothing back his fast disappearing locks. When he moves around, his hands are behind his back and there is little or no expression on his countenance.

A ND when they actually step before the microphone to read their lines, they do even that differently than you might expect. Not Stoopnagle and Fudd, from left to right—but Budd and Stoopnagle. They just can't be funny stending the other way around.

You want to dance. Or you want to hear a symphony concert. Or laugh. Or get excited over a story. So you get up from your chair, cross the room, turn a little knob. And it's there—the music, the comedian's voice, the tenseness of a falling off a log.

When you turn that knob, you are calling up not one genii, but a thousand. By that flick of your finger, you have made a hundred terrifying and invisible forces your slave. Breathtaking journeys have been performed for you.

thousands of men. Men toiling at dials, switchboards, climbing steel ladders in kee and snow. Men in laboratories. Men thumbing through old archives for rare information. Lawyers. Composers with inky pens behind their ears. Clerks in offices holding lists as long as roller towels. Newspapermen. Diplomats. Music publishers. Novelists. Dramatists. Men carrying boxes of water and basketballs under their arms. And a grown woman who earns her living by crying like a baby.

This is the magic behind the microphone. Ten years ago it did not exist. Now it stretches out in a glant panorame of numan and mechanical labor—a series of pictures that sweeps up back-ground from every corner of the globe.

Let us trace a typical radio program—
one being broadcast by the Columbia Broadcasting System, let us say—to its LET us start on

In your living room, your radio program was a series of sound waves coming out of the loudspeaker. But in here, inside your radio set, it is an electrical tribration being amplified by various devices. And before it was caught by the ultra-sensitive ear of your radio receiver, it was a free, wild, inaudible radio wave flying through space.

It was in the room. It was out in the kitchen. It was whizzing through you at a speed of 186.000 miles per secondas fast as the speed of light. But you didn't feel a thing.

Come up on the roof where your radio aerial plucked it at its strongest out of the night. Pretend that you can see it—even though there seems to be nothing up here but the wind and the moon. It looks like a mountain stream rushing along with a terrific current. On it are a thousand dancing ripples and eddles like sunlight. That steady, rushing current is known as the Carrier Wave of radio. It is a manufactured carpet of power, created to carry electrical impulses. Those ripples in their constantly changing patterns are electrical inpulses, at this very moment about to be transformed into your radio and follow this strange stream back to its source. It takes us back over moun-tains, through fog, wind, snow, through the heart of high buildings. We pass LET US take dark, vast stretches of forest. With dark, vast stretches of forest. With every mile we find our radio wave growing stronger, more powerful—the dancing ripples on its surface incredibly dazzling.

Where is it taking us? We thought our radio program came direct from a studio, a theater in New York. But we are veering at this very moment not toward the lighted skyscrapers of New York, but out to the wastes—to the places where the houses drop away—out to a lonely tower of steel rising 625 feet into the sky, on the marshes of Wayne, N. J.

This is the transmitting tower of WABC, key station of the Columbia network in New York, and it is at this very moment a living, vibrating center of thousands of radio waves. These radio waves are created by the power equipment belonging to the transmitter, at WABC, but they are carrying Columbia programs out into the New York-New Jersey area. At the same time 103 similar steel towers all over the country are sending out radio waves carrying the same radio programs of Columbia—like 103 electric light bulbs radiating light around the land. If you live beyond the New York area, you would trace your radio wave back to your local station's transmitter.

How does this happen? We shall see why in a moment. But first let us look at this strange tower which stands silhouetted like a tall, thin skeleton against the sky.

again. It is perfectly silent here. Not a click or a sizzle or even a humming tells us that every second 860,000 waves are pouring out of this steel structure into the night. That 860,000 waves per second is known as radio frequency—and gives us a hint why WABC listeners always turn to 860 on their lighted dials when they want to hear a Columbia

For a moment before we descend to the ground we contemplate the wonderful out-pouring of waves from this tower into the night. Waves leap out of it from top to bottom, like jets of water from a fountain. Some waves appear to be heading directly for the stars. Others travel along the ground about.

Now to our tower

Is the tower unguarded? A small building no bigger than a stone bathhouse is at its foot. But no one is within. We look a little farther. A few hundred feet on, we find another building—bigger. It is also of stone, and looks like an ordinary suburban dwelling house, except that it is surrounded by a base of concrete up to its first story windows. There are lights in this building. But still—no sound.

Even within the building there is no sound to tell us that work is being done. Yet this building houses giants so powerful that they can kill 100 men. Behind this stone facade, behind the quiet black panels and dials around the rooms, millions of radio waves are growing from a tiny vibration into leaping, wild, powerful things—strong enough to defy time and space in the fraction of a second.

A Carrier Wave is being born from the quiverings of a tiny plate of quartz. A whispered giggle coming over a wire is being transformed into a giggle so vast that if heard, it would sound as are happening behind cages. In action they are locked away from human touch. For the slightest living contact with them means death.

Nobody can enter the Danger Cages without turning a great wheel. That wheel turns off the current, deprives the forces of their life-blood and power in a momeht.

It takes eight men to tend the transmitting equipment at Wayne. They practically live in the stone building where are the transformers. They are semi-hermits, cooking their own food on the little stove in the stone kitchen upstairs. All day long they listen to radio programs coming through, testing them for distortion. From I a. m. to 7:30 a. m., when the transmitter is off the air, they do any repair jobs necessary.

"Dead Air," or silence from the transmitter is off the twant that waste of marshiand, it is a challenging conductor. Last year lightning struck the tower and blasted half the equipment in the small tuning shack at its base. Yet the engineers, working feverishly while the storm cracked around them, got the equipment mended, and in 20 minutes the transmitter was on the air—only to be struck immediately in the very same spot by another fork of lightning. Summertime is always hazardous, for it is then that locusts and birds fly about, and sometimes they fly into the eages behind which all the equipment is kept. The chained beasts of radio are not kind to such little creatures. A bird flying between two great condenser plates will be instantly electrocuted. Once a little gray mouse, crawling into the cage, electrocuted himself in a gigantic flery are and threw the transmitter off the air for a few seconds.

radio program? We seem to have temporarily lost it in contemplation of this mysterious and wonderful place. But it did not start out here in this desolate building of forces and power. There's not a sign out here of Gracie Allen, Kay Thompson — any of our old familiar friends.

Raymond Newby, supervising engineer at Wayne, points us to a cable which dives down into the floor, and out the back door of the building. "That's your radio program coming from New York," he says, and with a cry of delight we peer at the insulated wire.

Now to follow it, we must proceed to travel underground. Our wire weaves its way through the towns of Jersey, undermeath Hoboken. It crosses under the Hudson River, lands under New York pavements and travels uptown. Ah! This is what we were looking for— this is what we had imagined in the first place.

We pause suddenly at a tall, twenty-threestory building at Fifty-second St. and Madison Ave. This is the Columbia Broadcasting System building. Our wire leads us in.

But we do not stop at any of the offices which, to our surprise, fill the lower 20 floors of this building. We do not go into any of the twenty-first and twenty-second floors and scattered here and there on other floors. We go instead to a place we never dreamed existed—a queer little glass-enclosed room, lined with banks of black panels and ceilings—full of loudspeakers, on the twenty-third floor.

trol—and it is perched like an eagle's nest on the very top of the Columbia Broadcasting System building. It is a mad place, full of the din and bedlam of five or six different radio programs all coming out of the loudspeakers at once. It is a place of little red and white lights that go on and off, of wires and plugs and switchboards, of engineers who dash around and press tiny levers.

Our wire with our radio program on it leads us right up to a tall triangular switchboard set near the window. Here we find that it is connected with a little lever marked WABC and two little lights—one white, one red, significant off or on the air.

Bradley Libbey, the supervising engineer who sits at this switchboard, explains to us that the other little lights stand for other stations of THIS is the Master Con-

AGAIN we remember our radio program. Where is it coming from now? The loudspeakers over our head are blaring so many different programs—all to be sent out by Master Control to different parts of the country ber which was our radio program. But Master Control helps out—pointing to a loudspeaker on the wall—and we're off, Now once again we are following a wire through the building, and underground again, through New York traffic, alongside subways and trains. Our radio program is now an electrical impulse traveling as telephone conversations travel. And here we are—at It is the stage door we enter, going past dressing rooms. And quite suddenly we find ourselves in a small glass-enclosed room, resembling the gondola of a balloon. This is a radio control booth, Locking through the glass, we find that the stage on which the entertainers stand before the microphone, the audience, the balcony.

Now where is our radio program? Our wire runs first up into what looks like a large radio set on a table in the control booth. At a battery of four dials, nine knobs, with a clock in front of him, sits the control room engineer.

Before one sensitive states. Now

Before one sensitive side of our microphone is a brightly lighted stage—like the stage of a theater except that it has no scenery, but is hung all around the back with heavy velvet drapes. The people of our radio program are spread out on this stage.

This is the latest type of large broadcasting studio. It is as much a studio as the soundproofed modernistic rooms, in the CBS building.

There is one playhouse owned by Columbia whose very stage is separated from the building. It "floats"—free of traffic jars, impervious to the roarings of New York.

WE ARE On the Air!

We know it only by the little green sign telling us so, which blinks brightly from the which has a very conspicuous long red second-hand going around and around. We know it by the tenseness of the second-hand going around and around. We know it by the tenseness of the people on the stage. And the amazingly smooth show.

That smoothness is uncanny. There's not a break between numbers. The singer picks up where the dramatic cast in as soon as she's finished.

Yet nobody seems to be "conducting" the show. It seems to be running by itself. Not unless we crane our necks very hard, the man who has done the final moulding of your radio program.

He may be sitting alongside the control room engineer, directing the turning of the dials. He may officially have the story, we will call him the produces the show.

The production director is there for a lot of reasons. But his wildest and most harrowing responsibility during the broadcast is making our radio program of the does not, 103 engineers and production men all over the network will be thrown off their schedules.

He has huddled with the orchestra leader at rehearsals, a stop watch in his hand, timing the numbers over and over again. He's studied the singing idiosyncracies of the opera star, so he'll guess whether she's going to hurry or not. He's slashed out whole sections of the script. He's allered a word here and there in the announcements.

He has to direct silently—by signals, the piano may mean, "Cut a chorus," his throat with a razor when he wants an invisible accordion between his hands down the closing theme.

Yes. The production director is the one who gets your radio program to you much more than an omnipresent stop—He is the reason why one show may sound much smoothly on time. But he is watch.

He is the reason why one show may sound much smoother than another—the same materials. A talented production director can spot slow places in his figure out that it's the waltz on Cue lined speed of the action.

Out beyond the control booth upon the lighted stage, every head is full of instructions—last minute warnings—things to remember. The men in the orchestra are praying that they will not forget to notice the conductor's pencilled marks in their parts. The conductor's brain is a mass of cues. The bark Star of Finland becomes an actress.

By Clarke Wales

A DOLPH

SCHULZ, master of the steamer Chirikof in the salmon season, stood at the after rail of the Star of Finland and watched the spinning line of the patent log. Then, after turning a weather eye at a cloudless sky, he gazed forward, past the yellow steel sticks of the old bark, at the buxom red towboat which was shoving her ample bosom into the Facific, kicking up a tremendous tail of suds at her heels and hauling the Finland along at a good six knots.

The Finland, last of a proud line of sailing ships, was going to sea again, after a ten-year siesta in a berth at Alameda—a siesta, I say, because she was put to sleep at what should have been the early afternoon of her life.
Built in 1899 for the Hawaiian King's sugar fleet, she should still be in her prime; but after a few years in sugar trade and a few more carrying salmon for the Alaska Packers Association, she was tucked in bed, while her men—and Captain Schulz is one of these men.

He was out with the Finland only because the Chirikof was tied up for the winter. And the Finland was out because of—Hollywood. She was on her way to become an actress in Paramount's "Souls at Sea," with Gary Cooper, George Raft, Frances Dee and think we'll be in this moving picture when we get to Hollywood? You know, I was in that picture Treasure Island, when they came up to San Francisco for some of the waterfront scenes. Wallace Beery was there and that boy—let's see—Jackle Cooper—"

"Hah," the captain interrupted, "you were in that picture all right—only nobody could find you. The only time they turned the camera on you was when your back was to it. Hah-mmm?"
He laughed loudly and then, as the mate protested, looked suddenly at his watch. "Well, gentlemen," he said, "time to Apparently self-preservation weighed heavier than tradition of the sea. The captain and seven members of the crew took the smaller of the two boats; with them was one woman. Into the other boat crowded the mate, the nine remaining sailors and 32 terrified passengers. Thirty-one passengers went down with the ship, kneeling in prayer on the quarterdeck while the boats stood by.

All night the longboat wallowed in the sea. By morning it was obvious that some of its passengers must go overboard unless the boat was to founder; it was a case of hope for a few or death for all.

named Holmes took command. He rejected a proposal to draw lots, and formed a jury of himself, another sailor and the Negro cook to decide who must be cast into the sea. As best they could they judged who most deserved to live. They did not separate man and wife. And when one of two sisters of a condemned man protested when her brother was pushed overboard, they threw the two sisters after him. All told, seven of the company were sent to death in the icy waters.

That same day, April 20, a passing ship rescued the survivors in both the boats and they were taken to America. Holmes was brought to trial for manslaughter. He pleaded that he had no choice, that what he had done was necessary in order that any of the survivors might live. The trial was the biggest news story of the day and the principal topic of conversation through, and after six months in prison ne returned to the sea.

go below. I think we can get the foot-ball game on the radio."

THE Finland, Captain Schulz commanding, plays a dual role in the picture version of this drama-packed story. First, she is the British patrol ship Vigilant. When her face had been lifted, she was towed to Catalina, and there, with sails set and the captain pacing the quarterdeck (out of sight of the camera), she captured a slave ship, of which Gary Cooper and George Raft were captain and mate.

Then her face was lifted some more. Her black painted plates were made white and her mizzen man raised. From a bark she was changed to a clipper ship of the kind that set records for speed in the 1840s. Then she was the William Brown and she went back to sea again.

This time the main drama of the story was enacted, with Cooper as the man who played God. While preserving the basic elements of the story, Scenarist Grover Jones (co-producer of the picture with Director Henry Hathaway), made many changes and additions for the sake of the screen. Instead of an iceberg, the disaster comes from fire.

sequence at sea Captain Schulz found out about Hollywood. He got an inkling the first day, when Grover Jones was aboard. Sail was set and preparations were made to shoot a scene. The captain was making inquiries.

"Shall I take in the spanker boom?" he asked Jones.

"The who?" Jones replied.

"The spanker boom," the captain repeated. "Shall I take it in?"
Jones smiled.

"No," he said, "I don't think so. But I would feed it."
Later, when the Finland was sailing briskly, with every inch of canvas straining in the breeze, the assistant director pointed off the beam and cried: "We've got to go this way now, captain." z THIS

"This way", was dead into the wind, but "this way" the Finland went—on a towing hawser, while her sails belied backward and the captain mumbled To cap the climax, the Finland was sent out to cruise up and down off Catalina until bad weather came along. The bad weather came and the Finland proved herself a good trouper. But the captain came back not quite sure who was crazy.

"Souls at Sea" will be one of Paramount's biggest pictures of the year. Time and money have been spent lavishly, with the picture nearly three months in actual production. In Hathaway and Jones it has two of Hollywood's aces. Hathaway, a child actor in pictures 25 years ago, gave the screen such successes as "Lives of a Bengal Lancer." "Trail of the Lonesome Pine" and, most recently, "Go West. Young Man." Jones has worked on most of Hathaway scripts and dozens of others.

And in addition to the big names of the cast, there is the Star of Finland, a good trouper if there ever was one. A few days ago, her part finished she pulled out of San Pedro Harbor behind a tug, her straight, lofty masts etching a proud pattern against the sky.

And at the after rail, also straight and proud, stood Charlie Wiese, her former master, in command on what may be her last voyage.

"Where is Captain Schulz?" I asked a press agent.

a press agent.
"He went home yesterday on a train."

while the Finland was being towed from San Francisco to Los Angeles, and so, as he gazed forward at the tug, I asked:

"What was the last voyage you made in a sailing vessel, Captain?"

"Eh? Oh, yes," he said. "I brought the Star of England down from Alaska under tow. Yes, sir, hmm—I wonder what we do when we get to Hollywood? Hah-mmm?" "You used to be master of the Finland when she was still in service, didn't you, Mr. Wiese?" I asked.

"Aye, yes," he replied. "and a fine vessel she was. Yes, sir, we had some fine voyages together."

Now, I thought, maybe we're going Apparently the captain was not in a tale-spinning mood, so I turned to the mate. Charlie Wiese, who had come aft after struggling to get the yards squared up with a crew of steamer men who didn't know a mizzen brace from a shroud. AND so for two bright days the Finland coursed south, rolling gently ahead of a stout breeze which would have huffed her along at twice the tug's pace if she'd had her washing hung out. At noon the captain shot the sun and figured that our position was just what we could see it was by looking at the shore off the port beam. At night, as he paced the deck, he talked somewhat of the sea and of ships and sailors—but mostly of Hollywood. And when, with the Finland tied up at San Pedro, the press agent who met the ship posed him all over the deck and rigging with a pretty young actress—ah, that was something.

The story "Souls at Sea" is taken from the amazing true records of ships and men. On April 19, 1841, the packet William Erown, out of Liverpool for Boston, ranneed an iceberg in the North Atlantic. Eighty-one month women and children were aboard. The ship's two lifeboats could safely carry no more than 30.

NEW YORK.

HIS is the time of year when all good radio stars sit around the studios talking wistfully of Southern sun. A lot of singers have been laid low this winter with the flu and bad throats. Jessica Dragonette and Helen Hayes were ill. Doris Kerr, the baby of the blues singers, has had laryngitis. And lots of other stars have been chasing around gargling and hollow-eyed among the mikes.

So it is only normal that hi year the yen to go South, young woman, and get the germs baked out of you is particularly strong. But it isn't always as easy as it sounds. Sometimes you get a break and your program is off the air for a piece. Sometimes (if you are very lucky) you can get written out of the script for a week or so. But if your program marches on, and you are in it, the next best thing you can do is spend your spare time buying and can bathing suits—and hope.

genue on the March of Time program over Columbia, is doing just that. "And wishing like mad," she told me the other day. We were both standing in the doorway of the CBS Building on Madison Ave. and trying to get our collective nerve up to go out in the very wet snow.

"Last year," she said, "when the series ended, all of us March-of-Timers jumped on trains and planes and boats for vacation. But the show was re-signed immediately. And we all came back pronto. This year I am getting some Southern clothes whether I use them or not, just to keep my spirits up."

The snow pelted down and splashed on the sidewalk. I sighed, "What are you buying?"

"Embroidered linens. I have one lamb that is white embroidered in an all-over black and red figure. It has a slide collar and two bands of embroidery down the front. And it has a slide fastener all the way down from the throat to the hem. I thave a darling hat to wear with it, too. It is white toyo, with a deep basket brim and a crown of navy grosgrain ribbon."

"Makes me weak to thin of it," I said, pulling my curly beaver coat around me. Nancy nodded.

bought a very sophisticated print. It is black crash, high-necked, with long loose sleeves, and printed in the most gorgeous mad colors. With it, just to be fresh, I am going to wear one of Lilly Dache', pink tweed hats with a curving brim and a bow of maroon color in center front."

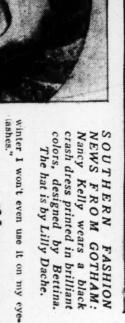

"Yes," I said.

"And for evening," Nancy cooed, "I have a black lace. I don't think that anything is as smart as black for evening, do you? It has a very slim satin slip, tight-fitting, and over it a long-sleeved, cobwebby black lace dress with a skirt that is yards and yards around. You have no idea what it does for me. And I want to be glamorous the next time I go to Bermuda. Did I ever tell you about my last trip?" I nodded. It was when she went down to make a movie, "The Call of the Sea," with Hope Hampton. It was a color picture and brilliant flower hues would photograph so well. But it was a dirty trick on Nancy, for she was cast as a young Hawaiian girl, Hope Hampton's daughter. And she had to have black hair. (Nancy's is a lovely feathery brown.)

Nancy's mother refused to let her dye her hair. So the makeup men got their heads together and used black mascara a dorty wight the mascara had to be washed out—with alt water'—and put on again every morning.

"Bermuda means mascara had to me."

said Doris Kerr, coming in out of Madison Ave. and shaking her umbrella at us ruthlessly. "If you are talking about going South, I have to because I have a new bathing suit. It is silk lastex and it fits like something they tel. about in the fairy tales. It is a beautful shade and I am getting a beach coat to wear over it."

wear over it."

Wear over it."

I said, "but I bet that you will be waving at me from the snowdrifts in New York, just the same. Nobody on radio ever really get South."

"Oh, yes they do," chimed Doris and Nancy together. "Ann Elstner did."

Ann Elstner is the Martha Booth of Trouble House, dramatic sketch on the Magazine of the Air. By hook or crook or sex appeal or something, Ann got herself written out of the script and had a leave of absence for a week to go sail-fishing down South. She took a five-hour plane down and spent all her time in jersey slacks, navy or red, white sweat shirts, and a little French beret with a huge pom-pom. She came back so glowingly healthy and so gorgeously tanned that she has made us all miserable. We felt like going up and sneezing in her face.

"But she didn't buy clothes," I pointed out. "She went down and caught sail-fish. If she had tried to go fashion plate the captain would have fed her to the sharks."

"She DID, too," Doris muttered. "She bought one of those new cellophane waterproofs and the captain almost lost his remaining teeth over it."

"Cellophane waterproofs?" Naney brightened. "Do you know a are she bought it?"

"I have the address upstairs. Come with me and I'll get it for you." They nodded vaguely at me and went in toward the elevator.

I zipped up my galoshes, raised my leaky umbrella, and went out into the storm." Come to think of it, though, I might be able to use a cellophane water-proof up North.

Fernand Gravet (the studio changed the spelling from Graavey for obvious reasons) iaughs it off. He is used to it, having had his likeness to the former Prince of Wales commented on ever since his undergraduate days at St. Paul's School in Hammersmith.

"It's only the profile," he insists in a British accent which, if you are not forewarned, is a bit surprising, coming from a loyal Belgian.

Yet Mervyn LeRoy and the publicity department of Warner Bros. studios are not laughing quite so heartly, nor do they accept the similarity quite so casually. There was a time a few weeks ago when they were in a complete dither about it, for Monsieur Gravet is the star of "The King and the Chorus Girl," for which LeRoy brought him over from Europe long before the dashing ex-king made sensational history.

It is not necessary to point out that the title of this film lends itself in extraordinary manner to the doings of the Duke of Windsor, although his lady isn't a chorus girl.

Nor does the story itself bear similarity to the real life one, except in title—heaven forbid: that subject is taboo with all English-speaking censors from Will Hays to the Archbishop of Canterbury. No, the scenario is not one of Mervyn LeRoy's problems. The fact that Gravet looks like a younger brother of the Duke of Windsor, especially in makeup, is enough worry for any one man; what can he do with all the money such an attraction will bring to the boxoffice, particularly since, with George VI safely on the throne, there seems little likelihood that there will be any adverse effect in the important English market?

FERNAND GRA-

VET, in riding clothes, head on, bears no resemblance to anyone except himself. He is dashingly dark, with hazel eyes which turn from brown to gray as the light changes. He has a delightful sense of humor, with a ready retort on the end of his tongue, and a malleable collection of features subject to considerable versatility in expression of thought and feeling.

Following other reporters, with papers fluttering about them, I suggested he might be all worn out by the time I had my innings. He replied handsomely: "Oh, no, all previous interviews have been merely rehearsals," which I call one of the neatest compliments a reporter ever listened to.

In a town full of brilliant people, it is difficult for the common or garden variety to find an opportunity of showing off, so it is not hard to understand my bragging a little about having interviewed the former King Albert, Queen Elizabeth and the present King Leopold, of Belgium. In another minute, we were deep in the throes of our admiration for the late King, his Queen and

"Although actually Belgium in its present status is so young, we seem to have made a good deal of history in the past 100 years," Gravet said with a proud smile.

Since Gravet was not born until Christmas Day, 1908, his recollections of those dark times, when Belgium stood sturdily in the path of war are those of a child, but he remembers when he did military service as a non-commissioned officer in the Falace Guards. His eyes twinkle when he tells of guarding the lower or back gates and receiving an order from his superior to open them exactly at 5:02 in the morning.

cated in England and has traveled widely. He accompanied his actress mother's traveling stock company on a tour through all the European countries, to Turkey, Egypt and South America. In this period, in addition to being baggage master and transportation man, he appeared in bits and small parts.

His father, Leopold G. Martens, began his stage career with Doris Keane in "Romance." By a strange coincidence, Gravet made his debut on the Paris stage in the same play in 1922. From 1923 to 1930 Gravet appeared in more than 20 plays in Paris, ranging from musical comedies to drama. After serving his required two years in the Belgian army—a year in the cavalry and then as first sergeant in the balloon corps—he returned to Paris and married the lovely golden-haired stage star, Jane Renourdt, who co-starred with him for three years on the Paris stage.

Gravet's initial picture was made with the UFA people in Berlin under the direction of the present Hollywood director, Robert Florey. He then had a chance to star in a German picture, but on advice of a friend he refused this offer and went into the cutting room, where he learned a great deal about acting by studying the film consigned to the cutting room floor. At this time also he became an assistant cameraman.

"Between what I learned about cutting and what I learned about the camera, I soon found out a couple of little tricks which every actor should know." Gravet has a quizzical lift of the eyebrow, which speaks volumes. "If I am ever accused of being what you Americans call a "ham," it isn't because

"You can't act the same in a close-up as in a long shot, even if the scene is the same; if you do, you are likely to be accused of over-acting, but I should never have known this if I hadn't refused an offer to star and gone into the technical end instead."

head on him, as our Cape Cod ancestors used to say. Since he has been publicized as the richest actor in Europe, I am bound to deduce that Gravet is himself an excellent business man as well as an artist.

More than 20,000 toy soldiers are housed in his Paris home and every tin soldier, uniform and hat was designed and painted by him. The collection is recognized by the French Museum of History and will probably eventually be placed there.

chinery man any mechanic in magnification. Recently Gravet received a letter from his godfather, who happens to be the Belgian court hairdresser.

"The children of King Leopold and the late Queen Astrid are exceptionally lovely and interesting," says Gravet, "and one of their governesses told my godfather the following incident: The little boy was looking at a large picture book he received for Christmas. In it were illustrations showing animals to represent the various letters of the alphabet. When they came to 'L,' the boy asked about the lion, which he found crouched under the alphabetical symbol. Why, that, explained his governess, 'is the lion, the king of beasts' 'Oh, no, it isn't,' replied the child, 'the lion is not the king of beasts—my father is the king of everybody, animals, trees, cities and people—so of course he is the king of beasts as well.' No amount of explanation served to shake his argument." WHEN the F who had been a favorite on the European stage and screen for four or five years, first saw the New York skyline, he says he exclaimed to his wife: "My heavens, my dear, why haven't we come here before? Such a short trip from France—and we might have missed all this:"

France—and we might have missed all this:"

"In Hollywood," he says, "I have worked too hard to know what it is all about, but this I do know: Nowhere on earth can people in the profession be kinder or more helpful than they are here!" Gravet's manner is suave, but always sincere. "I feel as it I have been wafted through everything on a magic carpet. All the ways, otherwise difficult, have been smoothed out for me; everything possible has been done

Also Gravet is an accomplished young man, speaking a fluent Franch, German and English and some Italian, with a decided preference toward English. It seems to me he has practically everything for a Hollywood success—good looks, great ease and charm of manner, a romantic aura, a forceful masculinity and a smile which is at once boyish, ingratiating and sincere.

With 10 Hollywood offers, he chose Mervyn LeRoy's because, he says: "Mr. LeRoy was the only one who could promise to put me into a film at once. I didn't want to suffer the fate of some of my European contemporaries, who signed a contract and never appeared in a picture." Gravet will return in May or June for his second film; he will make one in Paris in the meantime. He knocked on wood withen I wished him luck and as we said adieu I wondered whether be would use that line about the "rehearsal" on the young journalist who followed me.

Miss MacDonald also sings two comings three excellent novelty songs, "Students! Drinking Song," "Vive L'Opera" and "Virginia Ham and Eggs." Together, they give a beautiful rendition of the folk song, "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny."

In the supporting cast of "Maytime," John Barrymore plays a picturesque role as the temperamental impresario, his first since the memorable "Romeo and Jullet." There is a newcomer in the cast. Edward Arnold in a fine characterization, Francine Larrimore in her first picture. Good drama marked with excellent dialog in spots and some amusing comedy. Recommended. Schulberg-Para-

Repeating to a large extent his drole in "Come and Get It," but with considerably more emphasis on the heavy side, Edward Arnold in "John Meade's Woman" gives another of the great portrayals which have established him as one of the finest character actors on the screen.

Again he is a lusty and incorrigible robber baron, an unconscionable big business man who laughs at the efforts of his partners to cover up their swindles with pretty words. At the beginning he is a lumber king, but he is about to branch out into wheat, to take over great tracts of land. He is defeated by Nature ruining the land with great dust storms, and by a woman, leading the farmers in revolt against landgrabbing. In between he sacrifices the firedship and love for pride, fun

Arnold plays such characters as this with a Rabelaisian gusto which in makes them human and alive. So strong is the character he portrays that its spirit pervades scenes in which he does not appear. There is one sequence in which he takes a lumber camp manager and a street girl to a very "social" party, in order to humiliate a fortune-hunting finance whom he intends to jillt. He appears very briefly in the sequence, but throughout there is a feeling that he is there, making the scene come off. that he i

Also notable is George Bancroft in as the lumber camp manager, particularly in a scene in which he at rims the guests at the society party in a game of pool and in another in a game of pool and in another newhen he tells Miss Larrimore that ohe is in love with her.

I Miss Larrimore is a vivid new discreen personality. For years a id leading star of the stage, she was under contract to Irving Thalberg but never appeared in a picture for thim.

She gives a performance which is been against Arnold. Several of her scenes are superb particularly that in which Arnold asks her to marry him and another in which she gets drunk at the society party, jumps into a pool with her clothes on and finally pushes the hostess into the water. A few of her scenes suffer slightly from a toolst broad stage technique, but this is a always true of a first screen performance by a stage star. Her only serious handicap comes from story difficulties.

BAUME "BEN-GAY"

The Radio Reporter ... By William L. Stuart.

Observation

We'd like to take the long view of Hollywood radio. Get off to one side and play it off candidly, and without favor, against the cinema, whose next door neighbor it now is.

Unfortunately, we can't. The two are mixed too much here. A conversation that begins on a radio show will touch upon a movie a half-dozen times before it is finished—and the stories will be essentially the same. Two peas in a pod. Big peas.

In the few months that radio has been on the Coast, it has, chameleon-like, picked up some of the color of picture-making. Of course, the important people in the Hollywood picture colony are by the same token the important people in the Hollywood radio colony—but what is more impressive is the new favor that radio's technical men find among Hollywood people.

Movie stars who are used to receiving invaluable aid from their directors expect the same from radio directors with whom they work. They are not surprised when they receive it—but they are immensely thankful. The directors and producers in the film industry are often as well paid as the stars they employ. Such has not been the case with directors and producers in radio—but it may be so in the future if the great stars continue to demand the help of an especially talented technical man.

We can't bear too strongly on that double tie-up between the radio and the movies. It changes things so much from radio in New York. Here big rehearsals go on in the evening—and the shows, which are intended for the evening in New York and the East, go on in the afternoon. So that, although work is strenuous and exacting as Bing Crosby or Jack Benny or Fred Astaire or Charlie Butterworth or Martha Raye try desperately to polish a show, there are brief moments of letting off steam—gay banter and high doings—that are a revelation to one used to the neverending and polite formality of the Eastern studios.

Things are new, and rather exciting watch. For instance:

STYMIE—For the first time, radio has been forced to disregard the request of a dying person.

It would probably only happen out here in Hollywood — where such dramatic conflicts of principle and will to help can conflict so quickly.

A week or two ago, Clarence Muse, the baritone, brought Irvin Cobb a request. It was from a little boy whose illness was sapping his life and he worted to hear Muse sing "O! Man River" like he wanted nothing else in the world.

But both Cobb and Muse agreed sadly that this was one request they could not grant. That was one song that would prove too dramatically horrible to those hundreds of thousands of people who suffered from the Roods in the Ohio and Mississippi

No Fibs

The oddest things happen to Crosby. He broadcasts on Thursday nights, you know. Every Thursday night And every Thursday afternoon, you will find him Tehearsing with his innumerable guest

Mr. Stuart is spending several weeks on the West Coast to bring you gossip and highlights of the radio programs broadcast there.

There are some other people you will find outside NBC every Thursday afternoon, too—if you'll look. Two sister teams: one blond; the other brunet. They are there every Thursday, rain or shine, waiting for Crosby. When he gets there, they talk to him and take his picture with a little box camera one girl always carries. And that's all.

We can vouch for it because we've seen it. We got to the studio about eleven o'clock and, because Crosby was not there yet, decided to remain outside in the sun. One set of sisters was already waiting; the other came up arm in arm within a few minutes. Someone told us about them so we waited pretty anxiously for Crosby to show up. He did presently and the four girls walked over to where he was getting out of his car. He smilled at them and they smilled back and walked along at one side as he started toward the building.

Bing turned his head to say something and they laughed and shook their heads. "No, Mr. Crosby," one of the girls remonstrated, "that's not our lunch. It's our camera." Bing laughed and shook their heads to pose for pictures. We understand he has done so almost every week. First one of the sister teams stood on either side of him and he squinted his eyes against the sun while a third girl snapped the shutter. The sister team was smiling bravely. On the second picture, Bing made a funny face—like your self-conscious cousin Bob or Dan would—and the other sister team, which posed with him for that picture, looked out of the corners of their eyes at him. They stepped back and said goodby after that "d he went on into his rehearsal."

The four girls don't go to his broadcasts very often. Every once in a while, one pair will get tickets and come very early so they can get seats close to the front. Never try to attract his attention, we understand, thou g h he does smile or nod at them if he happens to see them. He's only given them tickets once or twice. Tickets are awfully hard to get, even for Crosby.

UPHEAVAL—Marth a Raye is cyclonic. Until the gal star of Al Jolson's Tuesday evening show is seen in action, she cannot possibly be appreciated. As she gallops onto the stage from the wings and draws herself to a halt before the mike, she opens her mouth in such a wide and welcoming grin to the audience that the microphone looks like a filling in a tooth. Rather exaggerated, but plausible.

Really, the girl is Rabbergasting and it appears as though the camera limits her range, if anything. In the radiostudio, she slaps her thighs, swings her hips, waves her hat around in the air and brings it down on the back of her head with the streamers flapping over her face as though they were meant to be awnings for her nose.

The girl's disregard for the decorous somehow gets over the microphone and is responsible for a large part of her appeal—the rest of the appeal.

It's that voice of course. That voice!

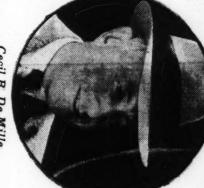

Turnabout

The stage of the Monday evening Radio Theater looks like an extra girl's dream of a casting office.

If that needs elaboration, we are only too glad to supply it. We have always thought—and have found on those few occasions that we have been in one—that the long rows of chairs in the waiting room of a casting office are full of people who wonder what the same office would look like if, in some Utopian world such as Colonel Stoopnagle is advocating, the stars instead of the extras were forced to wait outside.

The stage of the Radio Theater is like that—a Utopian w ait in g room where the stars sit together and fidget. Behind the three microphones at which the cast works, there is a line of chairs that stretches clear across the stage. On these chairs sit the members of the cast, some knitting, some gossiping in low tones with a neighbor, some looking up quickly from their scripts to obey the director's demand for a crowd noise. Because the Radio Theater tries to fill each role with the best actor or actress available, those chairs are each week warmed by stars and near-stars. And were it not for one thing, they might easily be mistaken for hopefuls who are aching for a chance to make good: When Cecil De Mille, who is quite a director, enters, none of them straightens in his chair and brightens up with the hope that, this time, the Great Man will finally take notice of him.

Incidentally, it was while watching that Radio Theater rehearsal that we made the first of the inevitable comparisons between radio and the movies. In radio, it is the "ames that are well known. We recognize countless actors in print and over the air whom we would not know were we to see them.

On the other hand, there wasn't a person on that stage who wasn't familiar to us. A rather thin man whom we had seen often as a mad scientist or a villainous heavy, a young woman who is invariably a secretary, an elderly man who is always a banker or judge, an elderly woman who is usually an aunt, a butler we have seen hundreds of times. Yet we knew the names of not one of them. And still don't.

Pay-Off

Ben Bernic no longer loses his shirt on the horses.

When we last saw Ben, which was a couple of months ago, he had just done one of those Thursday morning shows over MBS, and was worrying a lot over his race bets for the day. He told us he didn't really know why he was worrying—he lost anyway. But fuss and fret he must.

The other day, when we saw him at the Fred Astaire rehearsal just before his own rehearsal got under way, we asked him how the ponies were running for him. And he just laughed. Seems that Mrs. Bernie, the former Dorothy Wesley, whom Ben married a year and a half ago, decided Ben was losing too much of his hard-earned money on the wins, places and shows, and determined to do something about it. She knew Ben wouldn't give it up, so she just started studying the forms and playing the horses for him. Wins all the time, too.

Ben Bernie

Ben quit betting entirely for a while and let her do all of it, but he began to miss the worrying after a while. So he's back at it—in a comparatively small way. The Missus is winning more than enough to make up his losses.

Ben has picked a nice way of showing his appreciation, we think. He bought a little racing filly not long ago and named her Wes. Wes will begin racing just as soon as she is old enough—which will be in April and on Eastern tracks.

RECOMMENDATION — Mary Martin is Buddy's Mary's Mary.

Mary Martin is, in fact, the new romantic songstress on the Helen Broderick-Victor Moore-Buddy Rogers program which is to shift to CBS from NBC within a few weeks. And she is the romantic songstress because of Buddy's romance with Mary Pickford.

Mary Pickford had come to the studio to watch her betrothed go through his paces. After the final rehearsal, her opinion was asked and she responded very frankly that she thought the show needed a touch of romance. Then added hurriedly, we presume, that she meant a nice young girl who could sing sweet duets with Buddy. Miss Martin's the girl.

Ad-Lib

Charile Butterworth doesn't ad-lib for his au dience, but to flummux his straight man.

We found that out by watching Charile broadcast, then asked Cliff Arquette, who is the dry-voiced actor who works with the comic, and he said he thought so, too. He pointed out that

Arquette

In the first place, Butterworth's sketches are chuck full of ad-libs. In one recent broadcast, one out of every three lines was something the woodenfaced funny guy had thought up on the spur of the moment. But he doesn't do his ad-libs the way other comics do them. Fred Astaire's program, upon which Butterworth appears, must have two dress rehearsals each week—and it is in those that Charlie tests his ad-flibs. Has a writer parled in a room downstairs who listens in for the express purpose of writing in those chance remarks if they are funny and leaving the A out if they are funny and leaving the A out if they are funny and leaving the for Cliff's benefit. Butterworth loves to get him mixed up. At irst, the prospect of hearing something not in the script worried Cliff 1. lot. But after a couple of weeks on the show he began studying the continuity ahead of time with an eye toward ad-libs, and then he noticed that Charlie telegraphs his intentions of pulling a topper out of thin Stands up-a little straighter, looks kind of excited and happy, like a football player who's going to take the ball into the line on next play. Cliff looks for those signs these Tuesday evenings and they're always unmistakeable. Gives him a chance o think of a comeback that is also not in the script. Arquette doesn't always try to top one of Charlie's ad-libs, he says. If it gets a big laugh, he lets it go at that. And he can't always tell how big the laugh is going to be, because Charlie's laughs are always delayed ones. Takes the audience a second to realize how ludicrous his statements really are.

"Once in 40,000,000 births" is how medical officials explain the strange case of Pauline Taylor and Pauline Taylor, who were born on the same day, September 22, 1920, two hours apart, one in St. Ignace, Mich., and the other in St. Catherines, Ontario, Canada. Both girls have "twin" personalities, look alike, act alike, dress alike, think alike and have the same color (red) hair. They are the same height and weight. Both girls are juniors at Southeastern High school, Detroit, and since meeting three years ago, have been inseparable friends.

MAINTAINING A FINE TRADITION

It is with the greatest pleasure that the Lincoln Motor Company presents this new Lincoln V-12. The Lincolns of other years have been distinguished motor cars, but in beauty, modern elegance, and engineering, this new car surpasses them all.

In the Lincoln for 1937, designers have combined a fresh interpretation of streamlining with traditional Lincoln dignity. Headlamps are recessed in long and sweeping front fenders. The V-shaped windshield, the new instrument panel, and the sharply sloping rear deck are indicative of modern refinement in design. Luxurious new interiors are roomy and comfortable, and in the Lincoln habit of quality.

The Lincoln has always been a remarkably safe car. Every factor which makes for maximum security is an integral part of its construction. The strength of the rugged body structure . . . the deep.

massive chassis frame . . . the low center of gravity . . . famous Lincoln oversize brakes and "finger-tip" steering mechanism . . . all add their part in bringing positive safety to travel.

Power is furnished by the famous Lincoln V-12 engine. This precision power-plant is considered by those qualified to judge as a superlative expression of the V-type principle. In it is power for every exigency of travel.

The Lincoln V-12 for 1937 is now on exhibit. You are cordially invited to inspect it at your convenience, and to decide for yourself how far the art of building fine motor cars has advanced. . . . There are nineteen body types, including custom designs by Brunn, Judkins, Willoughby, and Le Baron. Lincoln Motor Company, builders of Lincoln and Lincoln-Zephyr motor cars.
